'DEATH MARCHERS' CARRY COMRADES

Only 1,000 Troops Defend Rhine Prize

PARIS, Tuesday, March 6.—(AP)—The U. S. First Army has sent tanks plunging more than a mile into Cologne, seized more than one-fifth of the city in assaults from the north, south and west, and the fall of the largest German metropolis ever stormed by the Allies seemed near at hand.

The Germans apparently wrote off the fourth largest city in the Reich, for they blew up the big Hohenzollern bridge and began shelling it from the east bank yesterday.

Field dispatches said the Germans were fleeing across the Rhine by boats, and one staff officer estimated that only 1,000 enemy soldiers remained to garrison the city.

Prisoners said these forces were falling back into the old part of the city, which represents only one-fourth of Cologne's area of 25 square miles.

THIRD ENTERS FIRST

The Third Armored Division, now within two miles or less of the heart of the city, was the first to enter at 7:10 and the 104th Infantry Division came in from the west at 9:23 a. m.

The Eighth Infantry Division, hard on the 104th's right flank, pushed into the city from the south. Cologne was shrouded in a pall of smoke from the fire of massed artillery laying down a terrific drum fire.

All three divisions were meeting half-hearted resistance, indicating the German army had no intention of obeying Hitler's orders to make a Stalingrad-like stand inside Cologne.

Cologne is the largest city in Rhenish Prussia with a normal population of 768,000 and is loaded with factories which once turned out weapons for the German war machine.

CIVILIANS COWER

Now the civilians cowered in cellars while the battle swirled about them, or they streamed back to the American lines carrying their household possessions.

Besides blowing the bridge at Duesseldorf, the Germans destroyed three bridges at Duisberg before the charge of the U. S. Ninth Army, which overran the coal and synthetic oil city of Homberg and smashed into Rheinberg in gains of as much as six miles.

By blowing all the serviceable bridges between Bonn and the British Cut Burma Lifeline

85-Mile Dash Perils Entire Jap Position; 8 Airdromes Seized

CALCUTTA, March 5.—(AP)—British armored units, cutting across the Irrawaddy river valley in an 85-mile dash, have severed the main Japanese land, air and water links between Mandalay and Rangoon and have seriously threatened the entire enemy position in Burma, Allied headquarters said today.

With the aid of British airborne infantry, flown in at the climax of the operation, the armored column seized eight airdromes intact, killed more than 1,600 Japanese, captured 40 guns and destroyed enough enemy supplies to feed a Japanese division for 10 days. The important communications center of Meiktila, 70 miles south of Mandalay, was captured.

In a long sweep through central Burma American fighter pilots gave the ground units support from the air and the column, which was partially self-sustaining, received some supplies from cargo planes.

The main Japanese forces defending Burma now are virtually cut off from the south. Their only clear escape roads run generally southeast through mountainous country into Thailand (Siam). It is believed, however, that the Japanese will put up a desperate fight for Mandalay before beginning a retreat.

The drive across the valley began Feb. 23, when the powerful British armored column broke out of the Pakokku bridgehead, on the east bank of the Irrawaddy, near

Russians Shelling Stettin As Stargard Capitulates

By ROMNEY WHEELER.

LONDON, Tuesday, March 6.—(AP)—Red troops have captured Stettin's outer defense city of Stargard while ripping through 150 localities in Nazi lines in the corner of Pomerania east of Stettin bay, and have tightened their hold on possibly 200,000 Germans trapped in another pocket far to the northeast. Russian artillery pounded the suburbs of Stettin, Berlin's port yesterday, as tank columns punched close to Alt-Damm, east bank Oder crossing town just opposite Stettin and 15 miles west of fallen Stargard.

To the northeast another Russian army in 10-mile gains captured 80 localities, including Wiesenthal, seven miles southwest of Schlawe, a stronghold on the road to Danzig, and Gross-Tychow, site of an American prison camp 18 miles south of captured Koeslin, a Moscow communique announced. Whether any Americans were freed was not immediately made known.

Russian troops on the Baltic stormed the stronghold of Kolberg Sunday night during a blizzard and were "held at the fringe of the town," a German broadcast said.

Naugard, 22 miles north of Stargard, also fell as the Russians folded the Germans back against a 45-mile line between imperilled Stettin and the Baltic sea, clearing the Red army flank for the coming offensive toward Berlin.

Premier Stalin also announced in an order of the day the fall of Polzin, middle Pomeranian stronghold 52 miles northeast of Stargard. Polzin had been by-passed by Zhukov's troops in their Baltic breakthrough which on Sunday

U. S. Destroys 6 Divisions in 56 Luzon Days

Four Others Trapped, In Critical Plight; Jap Losses 262,000

MANILA, Tuesday, March 6.—(UP)—American troops in 56 days of fighting on Luzon have destroyed the equivalent of six Japanese divisions — approximately 120,000 men—while an estimated four other divisions now trapped on the island are in a "critical" plight, Gen. MacArthur announced today.

The Japanese still remaining on Luzon are split up into a number of isolated groups, their supply lines to the homeland cut by American air and naval power, and under incessant attack by elements of 10 U. S. divisions on the march in five sectors.

MacArthur's disclosure boosted Japanese losses for the Philippines campaign which began last Oct. 20 with the invasion of Leyte to approximately 262,000 soldiers, sailors and Marines compared to a last-announced American total of 24,146 men killed, wounded or missing.

MacArthur's daily war bulletin listed new gains for the Americans striking northward into the Caraballo mountains toward the north coast of Luzon; eastward beyond Manila into the Sierra Madre mountains and westward from the Clark Field area against the Zambales mountains. Sizable Japanese forces were trapped in those areas as well as south of Manila.

The communique said that when the Americans invaded Luzon at Lingayen gulf on Jan. 9, the Japanese commander, Gen. Tomoyuki Yamashita, had the equivalent strength of 10 divisions, with supporting garrison and supply troops to meet the challenge.

"The equivalent of six divisions, with supporting elements, have been destroyed, together with the main supply depots, holding great quantities of ordnance, munitions, trucks, food, clothing and miscellaneous items," MacArthur said.

Japanese divisions are perhaps

Iwo Costs 2,050 Lives; Jap Sneak Treks Foiled

U. S. PACIFIC FLEET HEADQUARTERS, Guam, Tuesday, March 6.—(AP)—U. S. Marines grimly pressing Iwo Jima's strongly-entrenched Japanese toward the northern and northeastern cliffs have broken up a number of enemy attempts to infiltrate American positions.

Adm. Nimitz said in his communique today the battle lines remained substantially unchanged as the three divisions of Marines, who hold two-thirds or more of Iwo, consolidated their holdings yesterday elsewhere on the small but vital island where fighting is now in its 16th day. The Marines made no major attack.

Thus, for the second straight day, Nimitz reported little change in position in the bitter fighting, now in its 15th day, for the strategic little island 750 miles south of Tokyo.

"The enemy made a number of attempts to infiltrate, and subjected the Marines to heavy small arms and artillery fire," Nimitz said in his communique. "All efforts were broken up. There was no appreciable change in the lines on March 5 (Monday)."

No mention was made of the positions of the Third, Fourth and Fifth Marine Divisions last reported pressing the Japanese toward cliffs on the north and northwest edge of Iwo.

Navy Secretary Forrestal said in Washington that 2,050 Marines already had been killed on Iwo but the loss was not out of proportion to the importance of the island. He had just returned from Iwo where he said the enemy was putting up the "most thorough and skillful" defense.

Nimitz reported yesterday that 12,864 Japanese dead had been counted up to 6 p. m. Saturday and 81 prisoners taken.

1,150 MILES FROM INDIA BASE

Macon B-29 Flyer Safe In 'Luck' Sea Rescue

S. Sgt. William G. Thomas, of 103 Cleveland avenue, Macon, was one of 10 American airmen rescued from the Indian ocean after they bailed out of a B-29 Superfortress disabled in a raid upon Jap-held Singapore, according to the Associated Press dispatch from Calcutta, India. The crew had to bail out 1,150 miles from an Indian base. Sgt. Thomas is a waist gunner.

Their B-29, flak-riddled in the Singapore raid, they tried to reach their home base. Finding that impossible, the crewmen bailed out into the ocean. There they floated in their life jackets.

Twenty minutes later, an RAF Liberator, searching for the survivors of another Fortress, missing for 24 hours, spotted Sgt. Thomas and his associates. The Liberator dropped rubber rafts and supplies and signalled for a Catalina bomber to come to the rescue. The plane made a 2,300-mile round trip to effect the rescue.

Sgt. Thomas, 30, is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Thomas, of Macon. Born in Macon, he attended Lanier High school, and, at the time of his enlistment in the Army three years ago, was superintendent of routemen for a laundry service in Macon.

Bug-Thugs Pushed Out of Trade Find Bootlegging a Good Racket

By CHRISTINE JONES

Many lottery men, pushed out of the "bug" business since the campaign against the racket began, have turned to "moonshine" whisky for an easy living, according to county policemen on the lottery squad.

Georgia ranked high in the nation in the number of liquor stills seized by revenue agents during 1944, according to a recent report of the alcohol tax unit of the federal government.

"Conditions are fine now for the sale of non-tax-paid whisky," Asst. Solicitor R. M. George, head of the county lottery squad, said yesterday. "High prices and the shortage of legal whisky have filled the pockets of the moonshiners."

"A lot of ex-lottery men are working the moonshine," he added. When the bug companies break up—one by one—the pickup men and others in the racket enter the illegal whisky business.

Evidence of the sharp increase of moonshine business is recorded by the criminal court of Fulton county. In the past 10 days, members of the county lottery squad have made 47 cases involving non-tax-paid whisky.

One of the largest "hauls" yet was made yesterday by County Patrolmen Marshall Mauldin and M. H. Williams. The policemen found 120 gallons of "moonshine" whisky, concealed in a garage in the rear of an apartment house at a Peachtree street, N. E. address.

The whisky was in half-gallon fruit jars, ready for delivery to "retailers" throughout the city and county. The officers said the whisky evidently was brought into Fulton county and "stashed away" in the garage until the "wholesaler" could deliver. Space in the garage may be rented monthly, the police added, and strangers in the vicinity would not seem unusual to near-by residents.

The whisky was poured out, the officers said. No arrest was made, since no one was seen selling the whisky and police have not traced ownership.

The "moonshine" retails for as high as $25 a gallon, county officers estimated, and wholesales for approximately $11 a gallon. Most

PARTTIME RESIDENT OF GEORGIA WOULD BE ITS FULLTIME GOVERNOR

ETOWAH, Tenn., March 5.—(AP)—A railroad man who divides his homelife between Tennessee and Georgia wants to take up a permanent residence in Georgia—as its governor.

Hoke Willis, 42, a clerical employe of the Louisville & Nashville railroad for 25 years, has announced here that he intends to seek the Democratic nomination for governor of Georgia in next summer's election.

Although his duties require him to maintain homes here and in Blue Ridge, Ga., Willis always has limited his voting and participation in politics to Georgia. He is a former Blue Ridge city councilman and has served as secretary of the Fannin county Democratic executive committee.

A formal announcement and presentation of his full platform will come later, he said.

Jefferson Flags Flutter, Stores Close Early As Folks Hail 'Miss Mildred,' Heroic Nurse

By CECILE DAVIS
Constitution Staff Writer.

JEFFERSON, Ga., March 5.—Shops closed early today and flags fluttered at every street corner as the people of Jefferson gathered, 1,500 strong, in the town square to pay tribute to Lt. Mildred Dalton, Army nurse who is home again after three years of terror and torture in Jap-held Manila.

Farmers who remember "Miss Mildred" as a little girl on her dad's farm, townspeople who knew her when she went to school here, youngsters to whom the courageous nurse is almost a legend, stood in the shadow of the Crawford W. Long monument on the square and cheered as the tall lieutenant mounted a red, white and blue bedecked platform. She was accompanied by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Dalton, and her grandmother, Mrs. J. C. Dooley.

Feet were tapping as the N. A. T. T. C. band from the Gainesville Air Base swung from one

Berlin Again Target; 700 Bombers Hit Reich

LONDON, Tuesday, March 6.—(AP)—RAF bombers were over Germany last night in "very great strength," with Chemnitz as the main target and with Berlin also an objective, it was announced following a day in which nearly 700 American and British bombers bored through adverse weather to continue the air blitz against the Reich.

The Reich's "Achtung" service said Allied bombers were over Brandenburg (Berlin) province and over southwestern Germany tonight.

More than 400 Flying Fortresses and Liberators of the Eighth Air Force, guarded by 600 fighters, struck two natural oil refineries at Harburg, near Hamburg, and gouged freight yards serving the eastern front from Chemnitz, 35 miles from the Czechoslovakia border.

Four bombers and three fighters were lost by the Eighth today.

In the afternoon upward of 250 RAF Lancasters, protected by Mustangs, raided the Ruhr benzol plant near Gelsenkirchen.

It was the RAF's eighth successive daylight operation against the Ruhr, now menaced by on-sweeping Allied Armies, and the twenty-first consecutive day of assaults by the U. S. Heavies on the Nazis' inner fortress.

Meanwhile, it was disclosed officially that Italy-based bombers, carrying on a prolonged campaign against enemy rail lines, had caused "serious disruption to transportation facilities on vital segments of the Austrian communications system."

The Italian phase of the aerial campaign was climaxed yesterday by tremendous raids on rail targets serving German forces on the Hungarian and Yugoslav fronts.

In today's raids from Britain, a column of 400 American bombers split into three packs. About 150 Liberators went after the Rhenania and Elbano oil refineries at Harburg in northwest Germany—described as the two most important active producers in the Reich—while two waves of Fortresses totaling about 250 planes struck the Chemnitz yards already hammered repeatedly in recent weeks.

Editor Says Cabinet Post Open to Arnall

LaCossitt of Collier's Wants Governor to Stay In Public Life

"Gov. Arnall is the outstanding southerner of today and he could have a place in the President's cabinet if he wanted it."

Thus spoke Henry LaCossitt, editor of Collier's Weekly, yesterday in Atlanta. LaCossitt, with Mrs. LaCossitt, is a guest of the Governor and Mrs. Arnall at the Governor's Mansion.

To a reporter for The Constitution, LaCossitt said that he came to Georgia to "see what is going on in the New South." He said that if Gov. Arnall were to follow his idea of returning to private life after his present term as Governor, "it would be a national loss."

"Your Governor," continued LaCossitt, "speaks a language that the north understands. And it's so different from the language of other southerners, like Bilbo, of Mississippi, and Cotton Ed Smith, of South Carolina. Georgia's repeal of the poll tax was a light shining in the darkness."

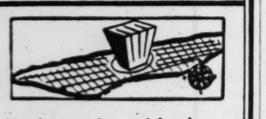

LaCossitt said that he and Mrs. LaCossitt would remain in Atlanta "a few days."

With the Governor, Mr. and Mrs. LaCossitt attended Drew Pearson's address to the Decatur Lions last night.

Millions Switch To Mutton Suet Idea For Chest Cold Aid

Soothes Rawness Due To Throat and Bronchial Irritations

Many mothers all over America are switching to this idea of getting fast relief for these chest cold miseries. They are simply following Grandma. For years she counted on mutton suet to help carry her home medication to do its pain-easing work on nerve ends in the skin. And so today Penetro hurries along newer help in the old reliable way—help that eases painful misery, lessens coughing, loosens phlegm, soothes chest rawness—so that you can rest more comfortably and give nature a chance to restore vitality. That's why millions are switching to Penetro today—why druggists are recommending it. 25c, double supply 35c. For all your family's chest cold miseries, be sure you get white, easy-to-use Penetro.

'Booster' Club Would Bare Good Deeds

By JOY BARNETT

Henceforth it will be harder for Atlanta organizations and individuals to hide their lights under a bushel.

A committee of approval, "to give the Protestant church a vocal means of giving encouragement to persons and groups who act in accord with Christian ideas," was established by unanimous vote of the Atlanta Christian Council yesterday.

Resulting from a suggestion by Dr. Thomas Anderson, pastor of the Central Congregational church, who helped establish such a "booster club" in Chicago, the committee is headed by Dr. Lester Rumble. His committee members include Dr. Anderson, Dr. John L. Baggott, Allen Clapp, Jere A. Wells and Morgan Blake. Dr. Stuart R. Oglesby is president of the church council.

Dr. Rumble said, in presenting his committee's plans, "we are often confronted with the question of the adequate expression on the part of the Protestant wing of the church in its commendation of good movements dealing with specific action."

When the committee notes good works of any kind . . . in public or private life, political, educational or social . . . it will recommend it for investigation by the council's executive committee. When such a commendation is approved, the findings will be mailed to each Atlanta church which has indicated approval of the plan. The churches who agree then will communicate an expression of their approval to the person or group involved.

The churches will indicate their agreement before the committee begins its program. Each Atlanta pastor will receive a letter from the committee this week, explaining the approval program and asking his church's co-operation. The co-operation, however, will not be mandatory, nor will it entail approval of every person or organization brought up by the central committee.

SHRINKING GERMANY—Arrows locate Allied drives on eastern and western fronts (heavy solid lines) in Germany. In the west the Nazis were fleeing Cologne as Americans were near control of Germany's fourth largest city. On the eastern front the Russians captured Stettin's outer defense city of Stargard and tightened their hold on possibly 200,000 Germans trapped in a pocket. Shaded lines are old German boundaries.

SHAEF

Dutch border except the road and rail bridges at Wesel and a makeshift structure at Rheinberg, the Germans sealed the fate of many of the more than 50,000 troops still on the Rhine's west bank.

The Canadian First Army captured one ferry crossing at Rees, 11 miles northwest of the western Ruhr city of Wesel, and the Ninth captured another at Orsoy, five miles north of Homberg.

NAZIS PRESSED BACK

The Canadian First and the U. S. Ninth pressed the Germans back into an area 10 miles long and six miles wide, and with the U. S. First Army held sway over 70 of the 90 miles of the Rhine's west bank between Cologne and the Dutch border.

Supreme headquarters estimated the Germans had lost 100,000 troops in the battle of the Rhine, sapping enemy strength so severely that he will be hard put to repulse Rhine crossings without weakening some other front.

The battle of the Ruhr basin—last important resource of the once-mighty German war machine—had in effect begun with its biggest munitions cities now within artillery range. Some of them already shook to American shells bursting in their factory districts.

Trouble was brewing for the Germans on the south where two other American armies were on the attack.

The U. S. Third Army was ripping through defenses along the Pruem-Coblenz highway, where it long has been held in check, and now was at least eight miles east of Pruem and within 47 miles of Coblenz on the Rhine.

The Third was moving under a partial news blackout—often invoked when an army is traveling fast and the enemy is bewildered—but it was known that it had breached the Kyll river on a 25-mile front, fought east at least three and a half miles and captured eight towns.

The U. S. Seventh Army was a mile and a half from the Saar basin's capital of Saarbruecken after driving the last German from the French gateway town of Forbach, and was pounding the city with artillery.

Hodges' First Army broke into Cologne so swiftly, in an attack beginning at the cold, predawn hour of 4 a. m., that 4,000 Germans defenders were cut off outside the city.

The final rush of the Third Armored Division from the north and the 104th Infantry Division from the west engulfed 40 suburban villages, and the first Americans edged into the city at 7:10 a. m.

The tanks were two and a half miles from the heart of the city after spearing through Cologne's Bickendorf district. This was the deepest penetration of the city.

PALL OF SMOKE

A vast pall of smoke and dust hung over Cologne as massed artillery crunched into its ruins, seeking out the six tank and Volksgrenadier divisions, which by prisoner report had pulled back into the inner core behind Cologne's ancient wall.

The only way out was by way of Hohenzollern bridge, and its approaches were heaped with the debris of bombings and shellings. The two spires of Cologne's 14th century cathedral in the center of the city loomed up through the battle haze.

The veteran 104th Division swept through the western suburban towns of Weiden, Widdersdorf and Lovernich and then drove on east into the city on the main highway from Dueren.

The Eighth Infantry was moving in on the 104th's south flank and the attackers were met by antitank guns and high-velocity antiaircraft guns, depressed to meet the ground assault.

On the north, troops were fighting in the edge of Cologne's railway yards, among the greatest in Europe, and were striking for the west bank of the Rhine just north of the city.

Hodges' troops were on the attack along a front of more than 55 miles, with Cologne roughly in the center.

OUIT AND LEAVE DOOR OPEN FOR REICH TO REBUILD, IKE TELLS NAZI OFFICERS

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

An appeal from Gen. Eisenhower's headquarters, addressed to German army officers via the American broadcasting station in Europe, has urged that they "reconsider the situation of Germany, the situation of their men and their personal situation" and surrender to the Allies.

"Germany has lost the westwall, her most powerful defense in the west. The Allies have reached the Rhine and the Ruhr," said the broadcast yesterday as reported by the OWI. "In the east the Red army is standing before Berlin. The industrial areas of Upper Silesia, East Prussia, Posen (Poznan) and parts of Saxony, Brandenburg and Pomerania are in Russian hands. The end is merely a question of time. . . .

"The responsibility for the outcome of the war no longer rests with the German officer. But the responsibility for his men remains—and this responsibility will indubitably be taken into account by postwar Germany. Germany's future will be hard, but there will be a possibility for reconstruction. The Allies do not intend to destroy Germany—only the politicians know that their number is up.

"Many German officers whose names must remain unknown have sent parliamentaries to the Allies in a hopeless situation and surrendered their troops. Other officers who could not take this course of action ordered their men to cease fire when the attack caught up with them.

"We cannot expect the German officer to do anything that would be contrary to his honor or to his country's interest. It is in Germany's interest to put an end to this useless bloodshed. The decision is up to the German officer."

RUSSIA

reached Kolberg, 65 miles northeast of Stettin.

Zhukov's troops and Marshal K. K. Rokossovsky's Second White Russian army to the east, which also reached the Baltic at captured Koeslin, 24 miles east of Kolberg, were chopping up elements of several Nazi divisions, including Elite SS units, caught between them.

Berlin also said that Rokossovsky's troops fanning out to the east along the Baltic coast had reached Schlawe, 78 miles west of Danzig, as they cut into the pocket where elements of 20 or more Nazi divisions were caught in the Stolp-Gdynia-Danzig areas.

NAZIS KNOCKED OUT

Rokossovsky's eastern wing also was striking toward Danzig from the southern side of the big pocket and were within 30 miles of the important Nazi naval base. Berlin said this was an all-out offensive, with large tank forces involved.

By German account the two Russian armies now have widened their Baltic foothold in Pomerania to nearly 50 miles between Schlawe and Kolberg in the west.

The fall of Stargard, a 15-way road and rail junction 19 miles east of Stettin, knocked out the southern hinge of Nazi forces strung out along the Dammscher lake, the lower Oder, Stettin bay and Dievenow river.

With the seizure of Naugard the Russians were within 13 miles northeast of Gollnow, big communications hub astride the north-south Nazi communications in this vulnerable corner of Pomerania. They also were less than 10 miles from the Alt-Damm-Gollnow-Cammin railway, linking both ends of this pocket.

Striking northwest of Naugard, a 10-way junction town on the Stettin-Koeslin military superhighway, the Russians were less than 24 miles from Hagen on the east bank of the Dievenow river opposite Wollin island, along the road to Swinemuende.

The port of Swinemuende, 15 miles beyond Hagen, controls the sea gate between the Baltic and Stettin, but there was no indication that the Russians intend to fight their way frontally toward Stettin.

Once the Russians reach the Dievenow river they will have destroyed the chances of any effective German flanking thrust against the Russian salient pointed toward Berlin and will have straightened their north-south lines on a 210-mile front from the Baltic to the Silesian-Czechoslovakian frontier.

Woman of Year Group Begins Plans for 1945

As Atlanta women scarcely began their work for 1945, the Woman of the Year organization met yesterday to formulate plans for recognizing the outstanding woman after this year's accomplishments are weighed.

L. F. Montgomery, president of the Atlanta Coca-Cola Bottling Company, sponsor of this year's citations, entertained key workers in the Woman of the Year organization with a luncheon at the Capital City Club.

The idea of recognizing the leading Atlanta woman—instigated here two years ago by Charles Jagels, of Davison-Paxon Company—has circulated throughout the country, and numerous cities have written the local group inquiring about the fundamentals of the organization, leaders reported. Mrs. William G. Hamm, Atlanta's Woman of 1944, said she had received letters from every state since her recognition in January.

Mrs. Robert F. Adamson, chairman of the executive committee, introduced the new board members, including Mrs. Arthur Harris, prominent USO leader; Mrs. J. C. Blalock, president of the State League of Women Voters; Mrs. John (Margaret Mitchell) Marsh and Mrs. Hamm. Other board members are: Mrs. Albert Thornton, Mrs. Floyd McRae, Mrs. J. C. Malone, Mrs. Francis Abreu and Mrs. Walter Dupree.

Present also were other members of the executive committee, including Mrs. Claude McKinnis Jr., Mrs. Donald Hastings, Mrs. Edwin F. McCarty and Mrs. Harold Cooledge.

STEAMING IWO VOLCANO FLUSHES NIPS FROM CAVES; MARINES COOK ON IT

IWO JIMA, Volcano Islands, March 5.—(AP)—Suribachi volcano is all steamed up. And it has become an unexpected boon to Fifth Division Marines clearing Japanese out of the conquered volcanic fortress on the southern tip of Iwo.

The volcano is pouring surphur fumes through its caves, flushing out Nipponese soldiers.

It is gushing hot steam from hundreds of fissures, where American Marines stuffed cans of "C" rations and 15 minutes later pulled out their first hot meal in days.

The volcano began acting up yesterday. Smoke billowed from the crater and fissures high on its slopes and soon a huge cloud enveloped the volcanic peak and the American flag flying from the topmost crag.

$3,000,000 'Off' In State Income Tax Predicted

Georgia will suffer a decrease in state income tax this year of approximately $3,000,000 from last year's returns, State Revenue Commissioner J. Eugene Cook predicted yesterday in pointing to March 15 as the deadline for filing calendar year returns.

Cook, who blamed heavier federal income tax deductions as responsible for the decrease in state returns, said penalty for failure to file by the March 15 deadline—without an extension agreement—would be 25 per cent of the tax liability, or a minimum of $5, plus six per cent interest.

The commissioner warned that a federal extension of tax payment does not mean an automatic extension by the state.

Last year's total income tax receipts by the state were $15,995,002, a decrease of $748,506 from 1943 despite the fact that there was an increase of 27,228 returns filed.

In another statement Cook warned that April 1 would be the deadline date for buying 1945 motor vehicle licenses. After that, a penalty of 20 per cent of the tag cost plus $1 sheriff's fee will go into effect, Cook announced.

There have been 311,673 registrants this year—through Feb. 28—as compared to 248,795 for the same period in 1944. Total revenue from licenses sold for the two-month period this year was $1,379,111.

Methodists Launch Drive For $25,000,000

By DR. THOMAS M. ELLIOTT.

Last Sunday was D-day for the 8,000,000 Methodists in the United States as a nationwide financial effort was launched to raise some $25,000,000 this year in connection with the Methodist crusade for Christ, to be used exclusively in immediate relief for war-ravished countries and for war rehabilitation. About $10,000,000 of the fund is to remain in America, it was stated.

Particular activity in connection with the crusade is now in progress in Georgia and the Atlanta episcopal area which comprises the North Georgia, the South Georgia and the Florida conferences under the supervision of Bishop Arthur J. Moore. Bishop Moore says there is every encouragement in believing this episcopal area will pay in full its quota of $1,200,000.

A quota of $74,750 is assigned the Atlanta east area, and that of the Atlanta west section is placed at $64,350.

From brief reports submitted by pastors yesterday, indications are that quotas on the two Atlanta districts will be raised before expiration of the month. For the entire North Georgia conference the quota assigned is $422,350.

He won his wings Jan. 7, 1944, and went to England the following July as a Flying Fortress pilot. He was on his tenth mission at the time of his death.

THEY'LL GET BY

Music Lessons a Tonic For Lawson Amputees

By YOLANDE GWIN.

The former professional dancer who lost a leg at St. Lo was sitting at the piano tapping out "I'll Get By." His jacket, spotted with the Fourth Division insignia, the Presidential Unit Citation, the Purple Heart, the ETO ribbon and the Infantry combat badge, was hanging over the back of the chair.

Pfc. J. K. Kronenberg was typical of the group of amputees who gather each Saturday afternoon at the reconditioning center at Lawson General hospital to study piano. The desire to learn is in a way accentuated by the presence of such an attractive young teacher as Miss Alice Gray Harrison, an accomplished pianist who conducts classes Saturdays under sponsorship of the Atlanta Music Club as part of its contribution to the war effort.

Mrs. Byron Bledsoe conducts a class on Wednesday, and the tuneful sound drifting from the music rooms is proof of the extensive work of the reconditioning program under the direction of Capt. Anthony C. Reiger.

Kronenberg and his partner were dancing their way toward fame and fortune as "Waverly and Carlson" at such places as the New York World's Fair, cabarets, night clubs and hotels. On a day when the future looked brightest, Kronenberg received two letters in the mail. One was the offer of a contract to dance (with his partner) at the Cloister at Sea Island, and the other was from his draft board timed to the tune of "I'll Be Seeing You." So Kronenberg spent the greater part of his training in Georgia, was sent overseas and lost his leg at St. Lo.

"I'd like to play boogie-woogie" he said, "and I'd like to be a radio announcer for commercial program. Knowing how to play always comes in handy, and losing a leg is a high price to pay to learn, but I'll get by."

There is a definite reason behind Pfc. Benny Nardone's piano lessons. The Rochester, N. Y. private, who lost his leg in the Philippines, after service in Hawaii and New Guinea with the 38th Division, formerly was with the Rochester Grand Opera Company.

Singing has been his hobby for years and, although he expects to continue it, his current piano lessons are in his words "a better way to have a musical background and to be able to accompany myself when I take up my singing again."

He adds that he prefers the classics to the modern music.

Pvt. Pat McKenna, of Long Island, N. Y., who lost a leg in France, used to be the drummer in the high school band back home. At Lawson for seven months he wants to learn piano as a hobby to offset his proposed career as a mechanical engineer.

Pvt. George Perry, of Glendale, W. Va., was with the 83d Division in France 16 days when a Nazi sniper got him in his leg. He likes popular music, used to take violin lessons and now with his piano lessons he practices every day until he gets tired.

A former postal employe, Pvt. James Brashear, of Baltimore, Md., was with the 29th Division in France when he received his leg injury. He has often dreamed of a career as a pianist, and S. Sgt. Davis Arnold, of Maheim, Pa., of headquarters, First Air Force, wants to learn to play "just for fun."

But it was left for S. Sgt. A. J. Di Mio, of Waverly, N. Y., to sum up Miss Harrison's music lessons. He said: "If I learn to play the piano, my years in the Army and the loss of a leg will be repaid."

Dr. Holcomb Leaving on Tour Of Latin America

Dr. Holcomb's schedule calls for "one-day revivals" in churches and schools in Havana, Mexico, Guatemala City, El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica, Panama and Jamaica.

Dr. Holcomb was pastor of the Wesley Memorial church for two years. He gave up the pastorate there a year ago. His home here is at 80 Park Lane, N. E.

LONDON, March 5.—(AP)—Gerald Percy Sandys Hewitt, 44, an Englishman who broadcast for the Nazis during the occupation of France, was sentenced to 12 years in prison today for acts likely to assist the enemy.

MONTY'S MOTHER: 'V-DAY, MARCH 23'

LONDON, March 5.—(AP)—Marshal Montgomery, always an obedient son, has been told to wind up the European war by March 23.

Lady Montgomery, mother of "Monty," has predicted that the war will be over by that date, the Evening Standard said today, adding:

"And she says she has written to the field marshal to make sure her forecast is fulfilled."

Lt. James P. Allen's Rites Tomorrow

A memorial service for Lt. James P. Allen Jr., killed in action Feb. 11 on Luzon, will be held at 9:30 a. m. tomorrow at Sacred Heart Catholic church.

Friends and relatives of Lt. Allen are invited to attend the service, to be in charge of Father Emerth.

Fifth Army Takes Vantage Points

ROME, March 5.—(AP)—U. S. Fifth Army troops, still advancing in the Mt. Belvedere area southwest of Bologna, have pushed the Germans off several new hills and occupied a number of villages despite the enemy's hurried reinforcement of that sector.

The Allied high command chose not to describe the action with much detail or to identify the ground gained, but the new push was known to have been in the general area north of Mt. Della Toraccia, which was captured by the U. S. 10th Mountain Division, and Mt. Castello, seized by Brazilian troops.

Front dispatches reported unusually heavy artillery actions and Allied air attacks in that area.

Diet Only At Doctor's Order

By H. C. NAYLOR, Pres.
Lane Drug Stores, Inc.

There is a curious paradox in the fact that the very wealthy are often the most rigid dieters. In exclusive circles slim figures are greatly coveted and must be acquired at any price.

Too often this is at the price of good health. Little sores appear around the lips, there is a distressing lassitude and lack of energy.

The diet may be the real offender. Be sure that any great limitation set upon the regular intake of food is approved by your physician. Moderate eating is only sensible, and a certain slenderness highly desirable. But health must come first. Diet only at the doctor's order.

"AFTER THREE YEARS, IT'S STILL THE SAME"—Lt. Mildred Dalton assures John N. stirring march to another. Lt. Dalton smiled and nodded as she recognized the familiar faces of old schoolmates and friends throughout the crowd.

Mayor H. E. Aderholdt welcomed Lt. Dalton back to her native Jefferson and presented her the key to the city.

"In all of America's wars, women have played an important part," Aderholdt said. "But in World War II our young men and women have served side by side on the firing line. We are happy to have one of those brave young women back here at home today.

"Lt. Dalton belongs to Jefferson and Jefferson is proud of her," he declared. "She was born and reared here, went to school here, and is known and loved by all of us."

He turned to the pretty nurse and said:

"When you leave Jefferson and return to duty, and wherever you go, our good wishes and prayers go with you."

H. J. W. Kizer, superintendent of schools at the time Lt. Dalton was graduated from Martin Institute here, served as master of ceremonies. Speakers included R. J. Kelly, commander of Albert Gordon American Legion Post; Mrs. Claude Catlett, president of the American Legion Auxiliary, who presented Lt. Dalton a bouquet of red carnations; Mrs. J. C. Bennett, president of the U. D. C., and George W. Westmoreland, past president of the Rotary Club.

Lt. Dalton's eyes were moist as she addressed the audience.

"I have been given many welcomes from Manila to San Francisco, but this goes to my heart more than any of the others," she declared warmly.

"TOO MUCH CREDIT"

"I feel I am getting too much credit for what I have done," she protested. "All over the world it is the duty of Army nurses to serve the sick and wounded. That is all I have done."

She smiled and waved as the band started to play "The Stars and Stripes Forever." Friends crowded close to the platform offering their hands and asking for autographs.

Mr. and Mrs. Dalton stood beside their daughter and smiled tearfully.

"When Mildred left Fort Benning to go overseas four years ago," recalled her father, "I told her to be careful and to be brave. I thank God she was."

At Washington, Ga., homage was paid to another Georgia nurse, freed from the Japanese prison, who arrived back in the states with Lt. Dalton. Also honored was a veteran of a German prison camp.

Those honored are Army Nurse Lt. Frances Nash, and Lt Frank Colley, of the Field Artillery. Lt. Colley returned to his home in Washington last week, after hitch hiking into Moscow following his release from the German prison camp by Russian troops. Civic leaders and others were invited to the event.

JEFFERSON PAYS TRIBUTE TO WAR HEROINE—Hundreds of townspeople jammed the square at Jefferson, Ga., yesterday to witness welcoming ceremonies for Lt. WMC Wins First Tilt In Worker Draft

BOSTON, March 5.—(UP)—The War Manpower Commission won the first round today in its legal fight against the CIO to draft workers for war jobs in two New Bedford tire cord plants.

Federal Judge Charles E. Wyzanski Jr., after three hours' deliberation, approved the government's motion to dismiss a petition for a restraining injunction demanded by the Textile Workers Union of America (CIO). The first case of the National War Labor Board vs. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., was cited as a precedent in the judge's opinion.

Describing his decision as "precisely analogous" to the conclusion in the Montgomery Ward case, Judge Wyzanski said:

"It was held in that case that a directive of the War Labor Board is not in legal effect an order reviewable in a federal court, despite the possibility that, if the directive is not obeyed, the executive branch of the government may seize the recalcitrant's property or take other drastic action."

The case represents the nation's first court test of wartime labor drafting. The CIO union had contended that the draft of workers for the Fisk and Firestone plants was "unconstitutional," and had sought an injunction to stop it.

MacArthur also disclosed that 1,068 Japanese had been killed on Leyte during the past week, boosting the number killed in that campaign to approximately 142,000, many of whom were drowned during attempts to reinforce the beleaguered garrison.

islands with the loss of two aircraft. Navy fighters swept Ponape in the Carolines.

Desperate Japanese infiltrating the American lines even wore American uniforms.

Five Japanese, wearing full American Marine battle dress, were killed by 24th Regiment patrols, AP War Correspondent James Lindsley reported.

He was told by the assistant chief of staff at Iwo headquarters that the Nipponese apparently were disguising themselves in an effort to sneak within the American lines.

STRONG POINT DELETED

Pressing the Japanese into the northern end of the small, black island, the Fourth and Fifth Marine Divisions edged forward on the east and west flanks, respectively. The Fourth eliminated one strong center of resistance.

The third division, unmentioned in the Monday communique, apparently was clinging to its center wedge, threatening to cut the Japanese line in two.

Lindsley's field dispatch said the northern terrain minimized the use of tanks. He reported the Nipponese were being routed from caves and pillboxes with grenades and flame throwers.

DOGS HUNTING JAPS

Dogs also were used to hunt down the enemy. The Third Marine war dog platoon went ashore Sunday and within a short time the sharp-nosed canines had flushed their first victim from a cave.

In Washington Forrestal said that although the joint chiefs of staff and the Navy had no illusions on the difficulty of taking Iwo, the Japanese were stronger than had been expected. In addition he said they made very good use of their weapons.

Despite the American progress in the Pacific, Forrestal declared, "We have got to face the fact that the Japanese still have an army" which he estimated at 70 combat divisions.

Candler, Floyd Tift Red Cross Drives Pace Dixie

While community leaders in practically every town and city in the United States continued to share the responsibility for raising $200,000,000 in the 1945 American Red Cross War Fund drive, local chapters in four states pushed the southeastern area closer to its pro rata goal by reaching or oversubscribing their assigned quotas over the weekend.

Georgia turned in the highest score, with three county chapters reporting over-the-top, and Florida followed with two. Tennessee and Mississippi added one each to the list. Ten chapters in the eight-state area already had reached their goals.

The weekend additions were: Georgia, Candler, Floyd and Tift counties; Florida, Collier and Wakulla counties; Mississippi, Claiborne county; Tennessee, Lewis county.

Meanwhile, John C. Wilson, manager of the American Red Cross Southeastern Area headquarters here, said he was pleased with advance reports from the field.

"It is too early to make a definite prediction concerning the final outcome of the drive, but I am sure it will represent maximum support.

"Indications are that the general public which has so generously donated to the American Red Cross in the past will not now fail the organization in this year of greatly expanded services to members of the armed forces overseas and their folks at home."

Although the general campaign officially opened March 1, a number of the larger Red Cross chapters will not start their local drives until late in the month.

Cologne, Where the Virgins Died

Legend tells that the Huns of ancient days slaughtered 11,000 British virgins and their leader, Saint Ursula, at Cologne. Today American tanks and mobile artillery rumble through the streets of the great city of the Rhine, the fourth largest city in all Germany, avenging the victims of those modern Huns, the Nazis.

At Cologne is a cathedral reputed to be the finest example of Gothic architecture in the world. At Cologne, too, are hundreds of factories which have turned out weapons of war for the modern Huns.

Capture of Cologne will be one of the most significant of the many indications, in recent weeks, of the weakness of the German armies. It may be taken for granted that no German commander would let so important a city as Cologne go without a fight street by street, house by house, lasting for weeks or months, if he could help himself.

Fall of such important cities as Cologne and others which have recently been taken by the Allied armies of the west, coupled with the failure of the Germans to mount a real counteroffensive in the east, is strong indication that the von Rundstedt battle of the Ardennes bulge was, truly the last convulsion of a dying German military machine.

Cologne is remembered by thousands of American veterans of the first World War. It was Cologne which was the headquarters for the American forces of occupation during the years following the 1918 armistice when Allied troops held the Rhineland.

Now, in this later war, Cologne will be merely a milepost on the advance which will take American troops and their Allies across a blasted, bleeding Germany until they meet the Russians fighting their way in from the east.

In one respect Cologne is typical, today, of scores of the leading cities of the Reich. It is said to be the city most severely stricken by air attack of any in Germany. But there must be, today, many other German cities in like state. Even Berlin itself can be little better off, as American and British planes shower bombs upon it day after day, night after night, than Cologne.

Our troops are in Cologne. From there we shall read how they crossed the Rhine and swung into the task of smashing through the heart of Germany.

At 41, Mack Tharpe Dies in Action

When the long, long list of heroes of this great war for freedom is complete, the name of Mack Tharpe will be well-nigh the top in letters of lasting gold.

Mack Tharpe was past draft age. He might well have sat out the war in civilian capacity. Or, once in, he might well have taken one of the safer, noncombat jobs reserved for men of his age. This is a young man's war. Men like Mack Tharpe who are young, but not in years, have to fight to get a chance to fight.

Mack Tharpe fought for that chance. With characteristic determination, he never quit trying until his desire to become an active Navy flyer was realized. And, once given his chance, Tharpe held his own with youngsters half his age in the grim yet glorious game which is combat aviation.

Mack Tharpe is dead. But he died as he would have it, died for what he believed in, died doing a young man's job. And therein lies, for those of us who knew and loved him, some small measure of consolation.

To Curtail Postwar Government Employment

A commendable movement is under way in Washington looking to the curtailment of the postwar federal government to a size approximating its 1941 stature.

Federal employment has grown, in the past four or five years, from approximately 1,000,000 to 3,338,700 persons. And it is the purpose of many members of congress to reduce government pay rolls to prewar length as soon as the military situation permits.

That the job will be an easy one, no one contends. Those who remember how entrenched bureaucrats in the WPA, NYA and other pump-priming agencies endeavored to hold on long after the need for them had passed, recognize that government bureaus with wartime functions will undoubtedly find excuses to continue operation long after peace comes. There are now 1,141 different federal agencies—many set up solely to meet some wartime need—and not a one will be eliminated without a struggle.

Virginia's Sen. Harry F. Byrd, chairman of the joint congressional economy committee, has proposed a program whereunder special hearings will be held at which each bureau will be given an opportunity to prove its peacetime essentiality or face liquidation.

It sounds like a splendid idea. The American people will not begrudge any amount of taxation necessary to pay for the cost of the war. But they will object if any considerable portion of their tax payments go to maintain overstaffed or unnecessary federal bureaus.

GI Black Market

Editor, Constitution: Some columnists lament the fact that soldiers in France convicted of playing the black market were sentenced more severe and not comparable to the sentences given operatives of the black market over here.

In my way of thinking their wires are all crossed, or their guns went off half-cocked before they had time to think much on the subject.

It seems to me there is quite a difference in buying things and selling at above ceiling price and stealing from Uncle Sam and then selling it on the black market.

The stealing was really done from the soldiers at the front fighting under the most severe conditions. The wonder to me is that the thieves were not given the death sentence.

Talk Farming, Linder

Editor, Constitution: Your editorial, "Linder Inviting a Statement of Policy," was most timely and interesting. I have enjoyed it immensely. It is my view that Commissioner Linder has long since invited a statement of policy, and his recent remarks referred to by you is merely a continuation or continuing invitation on his part.

In fact, it is my idea, maybe a mistaken one, that he is not as smart or wise as he thinks he is, or wishes others to think that he is. I do not receive his Bulletin officially, but hardly a week comes that I do not find a dozen or more copies thrown in the wastepaper container at the local postoffice, discarded by those on his mailing list, and every now and then I fish out one of these just to see what Linder has to say. Almost invariably I have found that his remarks are full of politics and unfavorable criticism of the administration, notwithstanding Linder was elected on a Democratic ticket in a Democratic state, where Democrats rule and govern, except as to his particular office, which it appears should be abolished, at least for the duration of an encumbent who is not entirely sympathetic with the administration, both state and federal. He should realize that he is a very small potato, with reference to politics, state or otherwise, and he should confine his remarks solely to recommendations concerning agricultural matters.

Stronger

Editor, Constitution: Answering the letter from a former Georgia man now living in New York criticizing Sen. George for his recent votes in congress, and for his refusal to string along with the Wallace-Hillman crowd, it is very noticeable how indignant the New York and Washington P. A. C. radicals are with Sen. George and very likely with Sen. Russell as well.

Maybe it is because our southern senators represent the views of their own Georgia people instead of the Hillman-Wallace radicals. Let these New York radicals rave and let their southern agents like Mark Etheridge, Prof. Frank Graham and Lillian Smith scream to high heaven. Their views in trying to start a class struggle in the south, abolish all separation of the races and other radical and foreign ideas, are not the views of the plain Georgia people.

As long as these P. A. C. radicals who work under the direction of Sidney Hillman continue to attack our southern members of congress, it will only serve to make them stronger with their own southern people.

"Impossible"

Editor, Constitution: There is a new song in the air that causes me to throw up my hands in horror every time I hear it. I am a radio girl—and whether or not I have a microbe mind is beside the point, but every time I hear Tommy Mercer sing "Accentuate the Positive, Eliminate the Negative," I just have to cringe at somebody's stupidity. He is arguing with the whole electron theory and Mr. Ohm's law every time he sings it. . . . According to both what he is saying is impossible. Out here at the Radio Communications Co. we build amplifiers, radio sets, repair all types including aircraft equipment and in the course of one day we have occasion to employ the electron theory and Ohm's law as well as other technical data pertaining to radio. And I know this—that if you accentuate the positive and eliminate the negative . . . well, "You Ain't Got Nothin'." As far as music and dancin' jive . . . the song is a good number . . . but I just wonder how many other radio operators had noticed the obvious, highly impossible phrase.

Roosevelt's Most Encouraging Report

(Editor's Note: Ralph McGill is en route around the world as a member of the American Society of Newspaper Editors' mission in behalf of universal news freedom. His column will appear as time and communications facilities allow. When it is not available, substitute features will be used, as today's by Dorothy Thompson.)

On Thursday the President gave congress and the nation an account of his stewardship of those obligations which he assumed in asking for a fourth term. That immense obligation was to do everything humanly possible to establish the foundations of a universal world organization for the maintenance of lasting peace. The prime condition for the realization of such a hope is that the three major powers should remain united beyond the war and reach, in advance of the ceasing of hostilities, agreement on those matters most calculated to disunite them.

This unity might have been sought in two ways: The one—superficially easier—to divide the world into areas of influence, in which each should agree not to rival the other, with the almost certain result that the Big Three would, in fact, eventually become rivals; the other—and much more difficult—to limit the ambitions of the great powers, reach mutual policies for every disputed area, and leave space for creative forces outside their own realms freely to develop.

For a time it looked as though the first tendency were developing, and, failing in an active role of the United States, it would be bound in the nature of things to prevail. For us there were only two choices: To carve out a sphere of our own against every American instinct and tradition, or to persaude the others to limit themselves inside the framework of an organization of the world.

Main Mission The latter was, as I see it, the main political mission of the President at Yalta. It involved reaching mutual and unanimous agreement on the Polish question, the Yugoslav, the Greek, the Italian, and finally, the German. It is obviously impossible to reach an agreement on these, or any other questions, which would be wholly satisfactory to each one of the Big Three or to the countries themselves. The President, with candor and humility, admitted it.

In Poland, he obviously would have liked to get Lwow at least for the Poles. What he did get, however, was joint Allied influence in Poland to guard its freedom and democratic processes. Though many a Pole may be deeply disappointed in the solution, the fact that it is mutually made, and mutually guarded, is the only guarantee that that agonized country may not again be turned into a battleground.

Under entirely different circumstances, the same holds true for Germany. One of the greatest dangers to the alliance has been the possibility of a conflict over Germany, once she has been defeated. This is why it has hitherto been impossible to define unconditional surrender.

Now, by reason of agreement, the Allies have made it possible to offer much more hope to the German people than would have been possible a year ago.

The diplomatic history previous to this war gave the European allies reason to fear a struggle might develop to incorporate Germany to the advantage of one or the other of the Allies. The division of Germany would not have excluded the possibility of a struggle for the successor states. When the Allies agreed not to play this game, Germany's future became that of a buffer state, which could be maintained either by being strong enough militarily to defend itself, or by being totally neutralized under the supervision of all. The first is out of the question. But the second has a prerequisite: a neutralized country must have the capacity for life; otherwise the neighbors would be all but forces to intervene.

Peace So the promises offered the German people by the President—and in a spirit fitting to a great humane democracy—are not made in the interests of the Germans, but in the interests of peace between the great powers.

A decision to eradicate the German people could only mean that the Allies could not agree on what to do with them. As long as this possibility existed, it was impossible to differentiate between the masses of the German people, and the past and present militarist nationalism of the German state.

Once the Allies made up their minds to pursue a strictly mutual policy toward Germany, it became essential to differentiate. Thus the President, for the first time, in calling on the German people to surrender, individually, in groups, and in armies, twice referred to "Kaiserism," "militarism," and "Hitlerism," as imposed on Germany, and convincingly addressed himself to the common sense of the German people.

For if the Allies hope only to control Germany "temporarily"—whatever length of time "temporary" may mean—they must try to lay the foundations for a peaceful society capable of existence.

The President's address, delivered as a report from a servant of this people, in a spirit sober, humble and sanguine, lacking in Woodrow Wilson's Utopianism and self-righteousness, reflecting nevertheless Wilson's idealism—idealism tempered now by a more mature consciousness—put the results of his efforts into our hands.

The President has achieved the beginnings, at least, of a really co-operative policy.

No one could do more.

I doubt whether anyone else could have done as much.

They'll Be Different After They Return

Those boys of ours who are living, fighting, experiencing in so many strange and distant parts of the world will be coming home to us, someday. But the ones who return won't be the same boys who went away. Or, perhaps, it would be better to say they will be the same boys, but with changes.

There are some twelve million of them, or more, who are undergoing that strange and wrenching experience of life, for months and years, as units in a vast organization of uniformed men, disciplined and subject to laws and ordinances different from those they knew in civilian life.

They have become, to some degree, numbers instead of carefree individuals, numbers corresponding to the numbers on the dog tags hung around their necks. Otherwise, they are but repetitions of the same pattern, the same pattern of clothing, of equipment, of training, or way of life, of manner of thinking.

Strange Contacts They have learned that the United States is but a small segment of the world. They have lived among people of other nations, of other races, and they have found those people interesting, in many cases kind and good. They have learned that a thing or a custom is not necessarily the best just because it is American. They have found that in some of the details of living we could, to our advantage, copy some of the customs of other lands.

They have found, though, that, all things considered, the manner of life we know in the United States is preferable to any other, on the whole. They have learned how blessed they were to be born Americans, to live in this country, learned it by absence and by the pangs of homesickness.

Their ways of thought must be changed. A boy who had lived all his young years on some Tennessee farm, thinking of the strange state, Georgia, beyond the mountains, as a "foreign" country, will have a vast changed conception of the world when he returns from living, for years, in Australia and on tropic islands of the Pacific. The boy who knew only the streets of Brooklyn will be immeasurably broadened in his ideas after basic training in an Arizona camp, advanced training at a Florida base, and social contacts with the British people near the base from which, periodically, he roars out in a B-29 over the wide expanse of Europe.

Better Perspective These men of ours—they'll be older than when they went away—will come back with a new wisdom deep in their eyes and with a new idealism for the America they hope to help create. For they will have been looking at us at home and at the things we do, from a perspective that gives them, in one sense, a clearer view and a better understanding.

There will be some things we have done which will win only their scorn and condemnation.

They will come back with a new and a deeper pride in their own country, but with the knowledge that neither it, nor its institutions, are perfect. But their pride as Americans will impel them to strive to contribute towards moving this land a little way nearer to the perfections of which we all dream.

They will be critical, yet appreciative. They will look on us with eyes that can weigh and compare and, while they rejoice over many things, they will not hesitate to seek change where they believe change to be good.

Long-Time Effect The impact, upon American life, of twelve million young citizens, fresh from years of world travel, world observation and world contacts, will be felt for generations to come. Probably for all time.

It may well be that these young men, after they come home, will be the factor which will shape our manner of life for centuries to come.

And it is a good thing. For they will come home purged of that handicap of provincialism, filled with love of country but no longer tainted by the prejudice of ignorance which is so disastrous upon a community when it is the ruling emotion.

No future Georgia politician will be able to make stump campagn capital by calling Americans of neighboring states "furriners." Not with men who have learned to respect the folks they have met and known in so many distant lands.

No Quick Cure For Japanese

The Moros of Mindanao are first-class fighting men. Ever since Magellan, fooled by their dark skin and Mohammedan religion, mistook them for Moors (thus their name) and treated them as enemies, they have been famous for their delight in battle and their scorn of death. Despite American schools, they are still trigger-happy and dangerous, but they have convictions about loyalty, fair play and sincerity.

A certain smart young Moro, son of a headman, was in school at Manila when the Japs took the city. He won the confidence of the Japs and was later permitted to visit his home, where he gave valuable information to Americans who were co-operating with the guerrillas.

To most of us he would seem a heartless heathen, yet he said of the Japs: "They have no honor or mercy. They torture the helpless for no reason. Their word is meaningless. They are the most treacherous and most cruel and most insincere people I have ever seen. I did not know there were such people in the world."

That is the testimony of a fellow Oriental, grandson of headhunters, who watched the Japs close at hand when they were conquerors.

Quinton Reynolds, Collier's reporter, has spoken of Jap prisoners held by the Marines. He says they are well fed and contented, and "a contented Jap is a cheerful little monkey who grins every time you look at him and who doffs his hat and bows every time you speak to him." Yet in combat this same Jap is "a fierce and treacherous beast" not resembling any known type of human being.

Every Jap seems two people, a Dr. Jekyll and a Mr. Hyde. It is not an act. He is that way. He is a problem for psychiatrists, yet one thing is clear to every student of human nature.

The Jap has physical courage, as every predatory animal has, yet he lacks the moral courage and manly dignity that result from conscious rectitude and conscious equality with the best of mankind.

Whipped and kept in his place, he is not only cheerfully polite but servile in a prideless way that would shame any white man.

But give him power—make him top dog—and there is no limit to his brutalities. He finds a fierce pleasure in slapping white men.

Why? It is typical of every person or people that is conscious of being inferior. Abusing their betters is their revenge upon fate for making them what they are. A book could not reveal more than the Tokyo paper's headline, printed before Pearl Harbor, which proudly screamed: "Japanese Soldier Slaps White Man."

With less than a century of contact with civilization, the Japs have made remarkable progress. But you can't change the soul and character of a race in that time. They can mimic the white man, but their nature must change slowly through the ages, as his did.

GEORGIA EDITORS SAY:

WE WANT ACTIVE SUPPORT

(Cobb County Times.)

Rep. Malcolm C. Tarver has indicated that he will support the house measure giving federal aid to education. That is fine. We're glad to hear that our representative feels that way.

But to "support" is not enough. We want Judge Tarver to support actively, to fight for passage of the bill.

Equalization of educational opportunity through federal aid is a wise idea. We want to see it become a reality.

Lights, Action ... Diplomacy

Samuel Goldwyn, Mr. Malaprop of the movies, has arrived in London on a diplomatic mission for this country.

Mr. Goldwyn, Washington assures us, is on public, rather than private, business. Otherwise, Hollywood's manpower shortage being what it is, one would be inclined to place credence in rumors that he is seeking to hire Anthony Eden away from Winston Churchill.

The exact nature of Goldwyn's diplomatic mission is not revealed. Had he been sent to Moscow instead of London, one would naturally suppose that it was because his vocabulary was the only one adequate to express American appreciation for the superstupendous colossalities which the Russian armies have achieved.

Mr. Goldwyn's appointment is but another manifestation of the accent on glamor policy of the new State Department. Mr. Stettinius considered appointing Cecil B. DeMille to stage the San Francisco conference but gave up the idea when he found out he couldn't get the necessary priority for the bathtubs.

Any day now, the Hollywood trend in diplomacy being what it is, I expect to see that Dorothy Lamour has been named ambassador—with sarong if not portfolio—to Russia.

And what better way to cement Pan-American friendship than by sending Betty Grable to Brazil? Or is that carrying the good-neighbor policy too far?

Of course, discretion is indicated. A matinee idol like Errol Flynn, for instance, could cause international complications as minister plenipotentiary to, say, the Virgin Islands.

GLADSTONE WILLIAMS

Analyzing The Wallace Vote

WASHINGTON.—The senate vote confirming the nomination of former Vice President Wallace as secretary of commerce lends itself to an interesting analysis.

With the exception of a mere handful of diehards, all Democratic opposition to the Wallace nomination collapsed after the senate passed the George bill, which divorced the various federal lending agencies from the Department of Commerce.

The opposition to Mr. Wallace as a member of the President's cabinet had centered almost entirely on the lending agencies. When the source of this objection had been removed, the Democrats, save only five members, withdrew their opposition.

Of the five dissenting Democrats, three of them—Byrd, of Virginia; "Pass-the-Biscuits" O'Daniel, of Texas, and McCarran, of Nevada—may be dismissed as meaningless, since they have consistently voted the Republican line rather than their own party. Particularly is this true of Byrd and O'Daniel, who, for all the purpose they serve, might as well sit on the Republican side of the chamber.

The remaining two Democratic dissenters were McKeller and Stewart, of Tennessee.

Republicans, on the other hand, continued to vote as they did in the beginning. Those who opposed the Wallace nomination at the start on the grounds that the former vice president should not be given control over giant government lending agencies were still opposed to him after the agencies had been taken away.

In other words, it was not the lending agencies that prompted the Republican opposition to Mr. Wallace; it was Mr. Wallace himself. Twenty-seven of them voted to reject his nomination despite the passage of the George bill.

The shallowness of the Republican position is thus revealed.

Other Implications But the senate vote on the nomination has other implications of a political nature which extend into the future. Mr. Wallace, whether he deserves it or not, has come to be the symbol of liberal forces in the country. He has attained that position no less by his own deeds than by the character of the conservative opposition that has been raised against him.

A symbol of liberalism, he has been made the target of conservatism.

Stripped of all pretenses, the vote against his confirmation represented a division of sentiment along those lines. There was no justification for opposing his nomination after the lending agencies had been removed from the department.

The effect of the vote, therefore, is to align the Republican party further with the cause of conservatism.

Now, it just happens that the Republicans have lost the past eight national elections, chiefly because the party was not able to divorce itself from the label of conservatism. At every congressional and presidential election since 1930 the Republicans have made a bid for liberal support, only to lose out because of the party's record of conservatism.

The GOP has formed the habit of becoming liberal only on election years. That is why the vast majority of liberal-minded voters cling to the Democratic party.

Consequently, the Republicans have done their cause no good, it seems, by allowing a majority of the party's representation in the senate to cast a futile vote against Mr. Wallace. It merely adds a fresh coat of paint to the party's drab colors of conservatism.

The position taken by Sen. Brewster, of Maine, one of the ten Republican senators who voted for confirmation, would have been far more preferable for the party. He maintained that the long-established practice of the senate of not interferring with presidential cabinet appointments, except for grounds of morality or competence, should not be broken.

As it is, the Republican majority vote on the Wallace nomination is sure to come back to haunt the GOP in subsequent national elections.

The Republicans never learn, it seems.

"Dentists' annual clinic called off to conserve railroad and other transportation facilities."—News item.

In every evil there is good and we could see it if we would,
But when our disappointments strike and things occur which we dislike,
We simply cannot understand why schemes don't work out as we planned.
You take this war, now, it's a curse, a blight upon the universe,
A hideous thing which we deplore and pray that soon it will be o'er;
Yet we have hopes that it will tend to bring great blessings in the end,
That peace and plenty will appear and all may live without the fear
That some vile monster, gone insane, will set the world on fire again.
But, count the blessings that have come and you will find them more than some.
We've learned that life can still be sweet without the choicest cuts of meat,
That cars will run a dozen years with gasless tanks and toothless gears,
That talking salesman do not pin us down and make us trade them in—
And there are men who marched away with spirits cheerful, bright and gay
And found more peace in France or Rome than ever they found at home.
(Of course, that's not your man, we know, that's just another guy named "Joe")
Conventions, national and state, are scheduled for some distant date
The dental clinic stands adjourned without the dentists having learned
A lot of brand-new dental rules, of drills and burrs and other tools
Which cause those agonizing cries, and that's a blessing in disguise.

JAY G. HAYDEN

Air Bases May Be Useless

WASHINGTON.—The appearance of an article entitled "Base Nonsense" in the February issue of "U. S. Naval Institute Proceedings," a semiofficial organ of which none other than Adm.-in-Chief Ernest J. King is named as chief sponsor, has caused a distinct sensation in naval and congressional circles.

The substance of this outgiving, in marked conflict with views expressed by the late Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, and heretofore regarded as administration policy, is that far-flung bases of themselves may constitute costly "white elephants," just about as ornamentally useless as the beast which adorn the Siamese court.

Specifically frowned on as sites for permanent American naval occupation are Guadalcanal in the Solomon Islands, New Guinea, Formosa, the Philippine Islands and "bases" in Africa, presumably including Dakar. And even Pearl Harbor and a prospective base in the Marshall islands are cited as possibly not worth what it would cost us, acting alone, to make them secure.

The real solution, it is declared, lies in "a realistic system of world organization," which would act quickly to knock down any future Hitler the moment he raises his head.

"Maintenance and local security of bases (open to use by all of the United Nations) would be divided along the logical lines of geography, each nation maintaining the bases within its own territory. Coupled with a stern policy of swift punishment for any aggressor nation showing signs of restiveness, it would bring the maintenance stations within practicable economic limits."

The author of this article is Cmdr. W. C. Chambliss, presently on active service in the public relations branch of the Navy Department. Previously he served as aide to Adm. Harry E. Yarnell, now retired but still regarded as one of the most influential naval elder statesment and this especially as concerns issues related to the Far East.

The basic rule Cmdr. Chambliss lays down is that a base, to be effective, must be equipped with "an appropriate fleet physically present and ready for action."

What happens when this requirement is absent, he says, was illustrated in the "superbly fitted British bases in China and Malaya.

"They possessed the means to support a powerful fleet, quite adequate for dealing with the Japanese. But the Japanese were not dealt with, because the bases lacked one vital element—the fleet. The result is tragically well known. Those bases, Hongkong and Singapore, speedily were put to use for the purpose of sustaining a fleet—but it was the Japanese fleet, the naval force that was able physically to get there.

". . . It is loose thinking to hold that the disaster at Pearl Harbor prevented the U. S. Pacific fleet from proceeding to the Far East and operating from our own and British bases against the Japanese. Even had we not lost a single ship at Pearl Harbor, we could not have sent our fleet to the Far East with any prospect but disaster worse than that which befell it at Pearl Harbor.

"Our Pacific fleet lacked the air strength and the supply train to support it in such a foray."

Pearl Harbor alone will require much heavier forces of ships and men than we have ever maintained there in the past, Chambliss says, and the Marshalls, to be effective as a base would require still stronger local forces and more heavily guarded lines of supply.

"Far flung indeed would be United States' stations in the Philippines, Formosa and even more distant reaches of the Southwest Pacific."

Further, Chambliss says:

"'Now we built some bases in Africa. We paid for them. Why shouldn't we hold onto 'em?—thus runs the argument. The answer, of course, is that we can't hold onto them. There simply aren't enough American dollars or American people to maintain securely any such array. Even were our resources not depleted by carring the great material burden of the current conflict, we still could not do it.

". . . In the case of bases there is a practical solution. But the solution lies in the field of the diplomatist. It is his job to work out a realistic system of world organization wherein the collective resources of people of goodwill can be pooled to maintain world order.

". . . Having identified our friends, we must convince them that we are willing and able to join promptly in any military moves necessary to prevent aggressive action by potential disturbers of the peace."

English Progress

Whether by superior initiative and enterprise or through flaws in their censorship, our British colleagues in the newspaper business have scooped our boys on a number of important stories both in the field and on the diplomatic front in the course of the last year. I lean almost horizontally to the belief that our trouble has been no lack of hustle and newssense but interference and a too-conscientious observance of the code.

However, to anyone who worked among our British brethren a quarter of a century ago or before, it is pleasantly apparent that they have stepped up their methods and pace. This is a compliment to our set because they learned it all from us. It was the American reporter, fresh from chasing fire engines in this country and with no more reverence for a noble lord in the foreign office than for the mayor of Chicago in the city hall, who taught them speed in delivery and punch in preparation. The process was rather painful to them at times.

A few weeks after the Easter uprising in Dublin in 1916, a small meeting was held in the office of the home secretary or colonial secretary in Whitehall which pointed up the difference between the status and methods of native English reporters, or press-men as they permitted themselves to be called, and the Americans. Wilbur Forrest, now a distinguished executive of the N. Y. Herald-Tribune, but then of the United Press and not long out of Peoria, and some other Americans, had whipped over to Dublin aboard a British man-of-war, leaving the English press flatfooted. Our cousins were quite upset and this little conference was called to thresh things out.

An English journalist, speaking for their crowd, protested to the secretary who was, I believe, Sir Francis Younghusband, against the favoritism to the foreigners. In a wounded and by no means demanding tone, he desired an explanation.

"But," the secretary said, "none of you gentlemen asked to be allowed to go. What was I to do, send for you? These American reporters came to me asking permission and transportation and I sent them on their way."

Our English colleague wilted visibly. This was a revolutionary thing, press-men dashing to a cabinet member in person with such a request. The correct way would have been for one's editor to write a letter to an undersecretary and possibly, at some future time, a "special representative" would have composed a scholarly and handwrought essay to appear back among the goiters and electric belts, as we used to say, perhaps weeks after the ashes and the story had grown cold.

Our reporters had been using the telegraph long before the speed of this remarkable invention occurred to Fleet street. I would suppose that American reporters who covered the Civil War sometimes filed by wire, but during one of the long, dreary night watches in London in 1916, Hal O'Flaherty came upon an item which dated its discovery by our English friends in 1901.

Mr. O'Flaherty was combing the English blanket sheets for odd fragments of the Bulgarian communique or, perhaps, an attempt on the life of David Lloyd George for they had an exasperating and, to us, incomprehensible way of stuffing big news into obscure corners under one-heads. You had to read the sheets literally from cover to cover lest you miss the greatest story of the day or, for that matter, of the war.

They used to tell of a story that broke a few years before the first World War which illustrated this amusing indifference to emphasis in the presentation of news. There had been a murder trial at Old Bailey which was duly reported with exhaustive Q. and A. by shorthand men with a lead which ran about like this: "The trial was resumed yesterday at Old Bailey of John Henry William Smith-Jones, labourer accused of the murder of his wife, Bettsy," under a head which probably read "Unusual Incident." At any rate, at the end of about two columns of letter-perfect monotony, the story related that along toward adjournment John Henry William Smith-Jones pulled a knife out of his boot and took several slices out of the judge, the prosecutor and the witness on the stand.

Mr. O'Flaherty uttered a cry as of some frightened wild thing and fell, as we sometimes used to say, prostitute upon the floor of the cozy little rookery which then was sufficient for the needs of the United Press. Recovering, he read aloud the obituary of an old English journalist who had died, possibly weeks before, because, as I say, haste in presenting the news was not one of their vices.

It developed that our late English colleague had been a historic man in his profession.

UP FRONT WITH MAULDIN

"I'm waiting to see what hatches."

THOMAS L. STOKES

International Issues Chief Concern of FDR

WASHINGTON, March 5.—Another anniversary has come around. Franklin D. Roosevelt has been in the White House for 12 years. He has completed three full presidential terms. A very natural question arises: Where does he go from here?

He still faces the final test, his bid for a big niche in the hall of American history, perhaps world history.

Will he be able to round out a career rich in domestic reform and bright with the conduct of a successful war by leading this nation into an international security organization and thus place the country in a dominant position in world political affairs?

Mr. Roosevelt is far more happily situated for such a climax than was Woodrow Wilson, whose career followed similar lines up to this point, but who was unable to achieve this goal. The American people seem determined this time to go all the way through. They seem to be awake to the pitfalls which beset the League of Nations, a quarter of a century ago; and they seem to be alert to see that the senate does not frustrate them again.

President Roosevelt is determined to cap his career with a realization of the Wilson objective. He is placing that first, above everything else. He has shown himself willing to compromise here and there, to sit down with the senate as Woodrow Wilson failed to do, to accomplish the goal.

He is very conscious of the mistakes of his World War 1 chief, with whom he served. He has proceeded every step of the way with that other career in mind. He has included congress and its Republican leaders in all of his plans in a co-operative endeavor.

This emphasis on international objectives, with other matters relegated to secondary consideration, has raised a problem for the liberal wing of his party as it looks forward to the rest of the fourth-term administration, as it contemplates all the serious matters of domestic concern.

There is much talk of that problem now. For the domestic field is going to be chock-full of all the problems incident to a period of reconstruction from war. It is in the minds of New Dealers that the reconstruction should be carried out along progressive lines and that bold thinking and planning should be the order in fashioning an economic structure that will provide jobs for everybody.

It is manifest already that this is going to require a constant fight along the domestic front, because congress is still much on the conservative side. The mandate of the last election turned largely on foreign policy and did not seem to work much for progressivism in the domestic economy. The attitude of congress on domestic issues makes that clear.

How much will President Roosevelt help with his leadership along the domestic front? Thus far, events indicate that, because of his compelling desire to achieve his international aims, he is likely to pay less attention to that front, at least until the other situation is well in hand. He does not want to stir up congress too much, nor to provoke it.

It seems indicated that he will leave the burden of this fight to New Dealers. The President will be on hand to supply an occasional prod when it does not interfere too much with his international plans, but the main fight on the domestic front will be left to the New Dealers. In this connection it becomes important, therefore, that Henry Wallace, who carries the hopes of the New Dealers, has again been given a place in the administration.

That's why Henry Wallace becomes an important figure. Much depends on his efforts to keep the Democratic party a progressive party. It is a real challenge for the progressives in the party. They may as well recognize it.

Should Lipstick Be Outlawed?

FORT VALLEY.—We may as well face facts, the men are getting out of hand. You might suppose that waging a war would offer sufficient outlet for their constant craving to do battle, but no, they need a little diversion on the side. Or on the surface of things it might appear that they have small need of additional legislative problems. Wrong again. The battle lines have been expanded to include the abode of every female above the age of 14 and their lawmaking is hitting an all-time high, or is it low? Be that as it may, the big, strong creatures have declared war on, and introduced legislation against, of all things, lipsticks. They are breathing fire and brimstone and pawing the earth round about them. Don Quixote is taking issue with another windmill.

It seems that this harmless weapon, a mainstay in any feminine crisis, is an abomination. They write seething letters to editors urging that this unseemly menace to life, peace of mind, and property, be curbed. As if to echo their heartrending pleas along comes a bill in the Tennessee legislature which, if passed, will certainly go far toward preserving all three, if male. It appears that the gentlemen in our neighboring state are viewed with open suspicion by their mates at such times as they seek the comfort of their little nests bearing the wrong shade of lipstick on their collars and vests. For some reason the little woman's ire is aroused. Broken limbs and homes flourish. The use of lipstick is the bill designed to put an end to such goings on, and how right he is.

With a burning ambition to quell these disturbances one way or another, this champion of men's rights, intends to remove the damaging evidence from the scenes of conflict, both executive and domestic, in Tennessee at least. From one to 10 years the ladies will languish in prison should they seek the solace of their favored brand of lip cosmetic, and if the judge has been through the mill, the fine may go as high as 10,000 smackers.

Patiently we have borne with heavy-handed masculine wit concerning our hats, our hairdos, our nail polish, our widely envied ability to deal with financial matters, and the never-ceasing hue and cry raised over slack-clad females. After all, children and men, allowances must be made. But this is the last straw.

The gentleman is slightly befogged. Mankind would be better served all the way around by a law declaring it a felony for a man to come home wearing any more lipstick than was in evidence at the time of his departure.

Enlisted Members of B-29 Crews Also Live Well

IN THE MARIANAS ISLANDS. There are five officers and six enlisted men on the crew of a B-29. All the enlisted men of a crew stay in the same hut, because that's the way the boys want it. Thus there are usually three crews of six men each in a quonset hut.

The enlisted men's huts are more crowded than the officers'. Outside of that there is no difference. They have a few more duties than the officers when not on missions, but they still have plenty of spare time.

"My" crew is a grand bunch of boys, as I suppose most of them are. They have trouble sleeping the night before a mission, and they're tense before the takeoff. As one of them laughingly said at the plane just before takeoff one morning, "How do you get rid of that empty feeling in your chest?"

But they relax and expand and practically float away with good feeling once they get back and have another one safely under their belts.

The six enlisted men of "my" crew are Sgts. Joe Corcoran, of Woodhaven, L. I.; Fauad Smith, of Des Moines, N. M., (near Raton); Joe McQuade, of Gallup, N. M.; John Devaney, of Columbus, Ohio; Norbert Spingham, of Wilmont, Minn., and Eugene Florie, of Chicago.

Springham and Floric are radio men, and all the others are gunners.

Sgt. Corcoran is the oldest of the crew. The first time I walked into their hut he called from his cot, "Hi, Ernie, the last time I saw you was in the Stork Club."

"But I've never been in the Stork Club in my life," I said.

So we puzzled over that a while, and finally decided it must have been two other guys, or else I'm a living a double life which I don't know about.

Sgt. Corcoran was a chiropractor before the war, and still gives the boys amateur treatments. He practiced for three years at Jamaica, L. I., and had a fine business worked up. I asked him how a chiropractor ever wound up to be a side-gunner on a B-29, and he said damned if he knew.

It's unusual to find two men from thinly populated New Mexico on the same crew. Smith and McQuade never knew each other until they met on this crew, and then it turned out they had joined the Army the very same day. Now they are great buddies.

McQuade was a fireman on the Santa Fe, and Smith owned a grocer store, but finally had to sell it. They'd just had letters saying it was below zero back home, and they were at least thankful to be away from that.

Both the boys have had experiences. McQuade made two trips to the Aleutians as a gunner on a ship. And Smith is serving his second tour of aerial combat overseas.

Smith was in the South Pacific in the early days, and flew 53 missions as gunner on B-17s. He has all his missions painted on the back of his leather flying-jacket—yellow bombs for the South Pacific, and red ones for Japan. He says he's only room for 27 more missions on his jacket, and then he'll just have to quit.

I asked Sgt. Smith if he hated to come back overseas as badly as I did.

"Twice as bad," he said.

"You couldn't."

"Well, as bad then," he said. But I haven't griped so much about it since we got here. It's not near as bad as I expected. In fact, we're living as good here as we did in America."

Sgt. Smith's odd first name—Fauad—is Syrian. He is growing a funny little rectangular goatee, black as coal. I asked him how long he was going to keep it. He said, "Probably only until the colonel happens to notice it."

Smith and Corcoran are the only two sergeants on the crew who are married. Both their wives are living temporarily in California.

We were all gathered around Corcoran's and Smith's cots one day, when Corky reached under hits cot and pulled out a huge rat trap to show me.

It seems they have a mouse in the hut, who eats their candy and soap and is a general nuisance. They couldn't find a mouse trap, so they set this big rat trap.

But every night Mr. Mouse eats all the cheese, even licks the plunger clean, but the trap is so strong it won't go off. So now Corcoran has strung thread through the cheese, hoping the mouse will get his teeth caught in the thread and thus yank the trap off. We're waiting with bated breath to see how this noble experiment turns out.

GALLUP POLL

Diverse Following of FDR

By GEORGE GALLUP,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

PRINCETON, N. J.—President Franklin D. Roosevelt was re-elected to the presidency last November for a fourth term principally because he was able to draw support from extremely diverse groups in the civilian voting population.

From an analyst's point of view, civilian voting behavior in the 1944 election was in many cases far from "normal." Voting patterns were interrupted and well established trends disappeared.

It was a combination of renewed support among business, professional, as well as white collar people on the one hand, and despite some defection, the continued heavy support among labor (especially union labor) on the other that brought about a Roosevelt victory.

In other words, for the first time since 1932, the sharp economic cleavage marking political behavior tended to diminish. Other issues, principally the war, became dictating factors.

For example, the steady defection from Roosevelt among business, professional, and white collar people was not only brought to a halt, but the President actually registered gains in all three groups.

His greatest gain came from voters in the business group, where his vote was seven points above that of 1940. He made a four-point gain among professional people, and a three-point gain among white collar workers.

In spite of the Roosevelt gains, however, Governor Dewey carried a comfortable majority among both business and professional people; but white collar workers, who in 1940 gave Willkie a majority of their votes, this time gave the President a slight edge in their group.

Farmers, continuing their movement away from Roosevelt, which started in 1936, gave Governor Dewey more than half of their vote in November.

These facts are shown by the following percentages of Roosevelt civilian vote among the various occupational groups, according to the 1940 and 1944 preferences of those interviewed:

BY OCCUPATIONS

	% for F.D.R. 1944	1940
Business	41%	34%
Professional	42	38
White Collar	51	48
Farmers	48	54
Skilled Labor	59	59
Semi-skilled	62	67
Unskilled	65	69

Meanwhile the vast majority among the labor vote again backed President Roosevelt in November, but at the same time defection from Roosevelt in the ranks of labor continued in 1944. The President's suppo.t among labor was off 4 per cent from 1940.

However, as the following table shows this defection occurred among nonunion labor.

LABOR VOTE

	% for F.D.R. 1944	1940
All Labor	62%	66%
Unions (A. F. L., C. I. O., Others Combined)	72	72
Nonunion Labor	56	64

A comparison of the civilian vote in the great urban centers—cities with populations of more than 500,0000—with the vote of voters from the nation's farms and small towns emphasizes a fact apparent in 1936 and again this year. This is a tendency toward centralization of Democratic power in the big cities as contrasted to the growing Republican strength in the rural and farm areas.

Here is a table illustrating this fact:

VOTE FOR F. D. R. BY SIZE OF TOWN

	% for F.D.R. 1944	1940
Cities over 500,000	61%	61%
Cities of 10,000 to 500,000	54	54
Town under 10,000	49	52
Farms	48	54

Will you leave less than $25,000?

IF SO, efficient settlement of your estate will be just as important as it is to a millionaire's estate. In one sense, it will be more important, because extra expense and loss would cause a proportionately more serious reduction of the support that your estate will provide for your family.

As executor and trustee, this Bank provides the same safeguards for an estate of modest value as for the largest estate — and the same helpful service to the beneficiaries. It serves for the same compensation that Georgia law permits an inexperienced individual executor or trustee to receive.

World Council Voting Rules Revealed

Bowing to Russia, Yalta Okays Veto For Any of Big 5

WASHINGTON, March 5.—(UP)—The United States today made public the voting rules to be followed by the proposed world security council in handling future international disputes.

It also announced that 39 nations have been invited to join the Big Five at San Francisco next month to organize the new League

WASHINGTON, March 5.—(UP)—Sen. Vandenberg, Republican, Michigan, announced today he has accepted President Roosevelt's invitation to serve as one of the U. S. delegates to the San Francisco conference. He said the White House has assured him that he will be free to act as he sees fit during the deliberations.

of Nations. France declined an offer to join the United States, Britain, Russia and China in sponsoring the invitations, but will attend the San Francisco meeting.

Briefly, the voting rules provide that:

1. Any one of the Big Five nations—the United States, Britain, Russia, China or France—could veto the use of force or other enforcement measures against itself or any other country involved in a dispute.

2. No council member—large nation or small—involved in a dispute would have a vote in preliminary council decision attempting peaceful settlement of that dispute. Such decisions would not require unanimity by the Big Five, but merely the affirmative vote of any seven members of the council. For example, i the United States was involved in a dispute, it could not block a council investigation or recommendations to settle the dispute by peaceful means. In such a case, the United States would not be allowed to vote. But if the council raised the question of using force against the United States, then this country could veto the use of force—even if the other 10 council members voted for it.

The voting rules, keystone of the new league, represent a compromise proposed by President Roosevelt and accepted by the Big Three at Yalta. China has accepted them.

The veto rule represents a concession to Russia which held out for such an arrangement at last year's Dumbarton Oaks talks. The United States and Britain did not want any one major power to have veto privileges over any direct punitive action against a would-be aggressor.

The Yalta agreement on voting procedure rounds out the proposed world security organization plan drafted at Dumbarton Oaks. The entire plan now will be placed before the United Nations conference at San Francisco and probably formally adopted.

Terms of the security council voting procedure and the list of nations invited to San Francisco were revealed by the state department.

The department also disclosed that Poland has not been invited to send representatives to San Francisco. Such an invitation will not be issued until the government of Poland has been reconstituted on a broader democratic basis as decided upon at Yalta.

Only countries which have declared war against at least one of the common enemy are on the invitation list. If all accept, 44 nations will be represented.

Argentina is the only country in the Western Hemisphere which will not be represented. She has not declared war on either Germany or Japan. Because of their neutral status, Spain, Portugal, Ireland, Switzerland and Sweden also are among the uninvited. Iceland and Finland do not appear on the list. Neither does Italy, which enjoys only the status of a "co-belligerent."

The council voting procedure takes on vast importance inasmuch as the United States, Britain, Russia and China agreed at Dumbarton Oaks that the council should have "primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security."

Secretary of State Stettinius explained the distinction drawn between the permanent (Big Five) council members and non-permanent members by saying each of the Big Five is entitled to veto powers on enforcement measures because each "must, as a matter of necessity, bear the principal responsibility for action."

The Big Five, however, do not have veto power in council deliberations of steps to settle disputes by peaceful means. In such cases a simple majority of seven council members is necessary. And if a council member is party to the dispute under consideration, his country may not vote.

Fred Vinson Given Jones' RFC Billions

Senate Poises Okay For Post It Denied To Henry Wallace

WASHINGTON, March 5.—(AP) President Roosevelt today nominated Fred M. Vinson, now economic stabilization director, to take over the Federal Loan Administration job which the senate wouldn't let Henry Wallace have.

The appointment, which the senate seemed ready to confirm, quickly completed the division of the jobs from which Mr. Roosevelt ousted Jesse Jones, Houston, Texas, banker and publisher, inauguration day to make room for Wallace.

The senate held up confirmation of the former vice president as secretary of commerce until legislation was put through divorcing the loan authority from the cabinet post. Jones had held both jobs.

The loan administrator is head of the multi-billion dollar Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its giant subsidiaries.

Vinson has been economic stabilization director since James F. Byrnes left the post to become war mobilization director.

The stabilization job, in essence, is that of appeals court from decisions of the federal war agencies dealing with civilian economic affairs, such as the Office of Price Administration and the War Labor Board, and referee between such agencies when they come in conflict.

Vinson has clung tightly to the Little Steel formula in passing on general wage increases approved by the WLB, and in cases of other WLB rulings has sought to give OPA a veto if they would require compensating price increases.

That attitude has brought him severe criticism from labor elements.

The White House, in announcing Vinson's nomination for the loan post, said the President had a successor for the stabilization hot spot in mind, but gave no inkling of his identity.

Vinson, 54 years old and a native of Kentucky, came to the stabilization office from the District of Columbia court of appeals bench. Before he went on the court he had served seven terms as a member of the house of representatives from Kentucky. He was an early advocate of pay-as-you go taxation, and was active in the House Ways and Means Taxation Subcommittee.

the Burma oil fields, and drove directly east on a fairly good road. Pakokku is 70 miles southwest of Mandalay.

In its first clash at Taungtha, 23 miles east of Pakokku, the column killed eight of the enemy. With its armor pushing on two abreast to save time the column smashed southeast to Mahlaing, where 70 more Japanese were killed.

Four hundred Japanese were killed when the column drove through an enemy supply dump near Mahlaing and destroyed thousands of artillery shells.

WIPE OUT COLUMN

Continuing down the road to Meiktila the guns of the armored vehicles literally blew to bits a Japanese column of supply trucks heading toward the Mandalay front.

On Feb. 27 the British column took two Japanese airstrips near Meiktila, on which hand-picked airborne infantry units later were landed. Six other airdromes and nearby strategic positions then were seized. The airfields were littered with 41 wrecked enemy planes.

In the few hours of fighting before Meiktila fell the British killed 1,200 Japanese of an estimated original defending force of 2,500.

SILVER MINES TIED UP

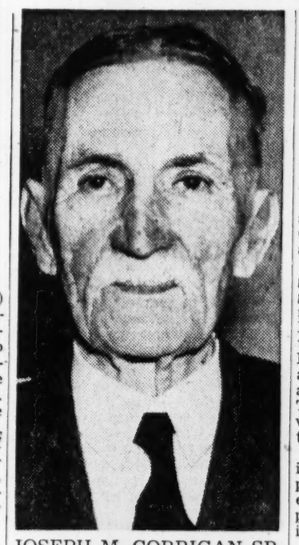

American pilots of the 10th Air Force helped the British 36th Division chase Japanese south from their positions near Mogok, 68 miles northeast of Mandalay. Five waves of American P-47s pressed home the attack as the Japanese evacuated troops, gasoline supplies and ammunition toward Mandalay.

American authorities with the Chinese First Army in northern Burma said the rich Baldwin lead and silver mines near Lashio, on the old Burma road, have sustained only slight damage, but cannot be operated for the present because the Japanese took some machinery from the area. The mines were captured recently by Chinese troops.

"Why, I'm at this minute reading a letter just received from him," she exclaimed. "He's a wonderful boy and I'm overjoyed that he's safe. It is the first I've heard of his latest exploit. He was specially trained for this Superfortress job and I know he'll always show up credibly in whatever corner he finds himself."

Sgt. Thomas received two years' training in the air service in this country before going overseas a year ago. Part of his training was at the Boeing Aircraft Works in Seattle. He went directly to the Asiatic war theater and was the only Georgian to take part in the first B-29 raid on Tokyo last May.

Besides his parents, Sgt. Thomas has a brother, J. Leon Thomas, of Rome.

Foreign Policy Hit by Pearson In Decatur Talk

Drew Pearson, columnist and radio commentator, in an address to the Decatur Lions last night, criticized American foreign policy and urged abandonment of the system of following the lead of Great Britain in handling foreign affairs.

"With the biggest fleet, the greatest merchant marine and the greatest volume of foreign investments, the time has come," said Pearson, "when this country ought to have its own foreign policy. Hitherto, we have followed Britain's lead 100 per cent in Europe and about 75 per cent in Asia. That has created a situation which, to say the least, is unfortunate."

Pearson spoke to a large crowd in the Decatur auditorium. To reporters, he had previously predicted that Gov. Arnall could have a position in the President's cabinet if he should desire it.

Introduced last night by the Governor, Pearson plunged immediately into a discussion of foreign affairs. He explained his disapproval of some of the men recently appointed to high places in the state department as due to their amenability to British foreign policy. On this connection, he mentioned specifically Joseph E. Grew, James Dunn, Nelson Rockefeller and Julius Holmes.

Pearson said Great Britain and Russia are jealous rivals. President Roosevelt, he said, is the arbiter between them and so far has succeeded in holding them together.

But Pearson predicted that the present Pan-American conference at Mexico City and the coming conference at San Francisco will do much to determine whether the Allied nations can build up a secure peace or whether the world will see another war 25 or 30 years from now. That war, Pearson indicated, might come between Great Britain and Russia.

Persons returning from the Yalta conference, Pearson said, predicted the end of the war in Germany between April and June. Pearson himself predicted the end of the war with Japan within six months after the end of the war in Germany.

PAINT REMOVERS USED

Another alcoholic mixture seems to be selling in the county, the officers said. Although no cases have been made in recent months, the policemen said that they had found a paint remover containing 190 proof alcohol on several lottery and whisky raids.

The paint remover, which has been known to produce death, blindness or serious illness, usually is sold to Negroes, they said. The mixture can be bought at any paint or hardware store, police added.

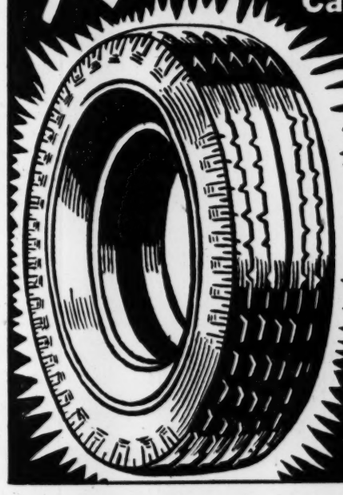

"It is not a violation of the law to possess the remover," George said, "since it is used legitimately to remove paint. If it is sold as an alcoholic beverage, it is a violation. Unless the policemen actually can see the remover being sold as a beverage, no case can be made."

Craving for Easter Suit Gets Boy Into Custody

Because he "just had to have an Easter suit," David Earl Reese, 12-year-old Negro of 57 Young street, S. E., is in trouble. For, according to Patrolmen J. W. Belcher and C. E. Hale, David stole a bicycle and tried to sell it in order to obtain money with which to gratify his Easter fancy.

The patrolmen took the boy into custody at 112 Edgewood avenue after learning that he was trying to sell the vehicle. He said that he wanted the new Easter suit and the only way he could get it was to steal a bicycle and sell it.

Davis is now in the custody of the juvenile court.

Veloz and Yolanda, the world's foremost ballroom team, will appear at the municipal auditorium at 8:30 o'clock tonight when they bring their "Dansation" revue, including vocalists, instrumentalists and comedians here for one performance.

The dancing stars have appeared in all of the swank clubs in America and Europe and have appeared in four big Broadway musicals including Ziegfeld's "Hot Cha," as well as many top-flight motion pictures, among them "Holiday Inn." Their graceful ballroom interpretations have placed them at the top of the list of dance teams for more than eight years.

In making this current tour, they turned down innumerable offers to appear in plays on Broadway and roles in the movies in order that they might touch the people who haven't had the opportunity of seeing their fine art, except throught he medium of the screen.

Appearing here with Veloz and Yolanda will be Gloria Blake, lovely singing star of stage and radio; Elizabeth Talbot Martin, who will give her incomparable satirical impressions of famous people; Evelyn and Hazel Lenaud, piano team; Amelia Gilmore, a fast-stepping exponent of tap and ballet dancing, and Samuel Paqua, an accordionist of much note.

Due to their heavy schedule, Veloz and Yolanda are able to make only one appearance here. There will be no matinee.

Sinatra Placed In 4-F Again

JERSEY CITY, N. J., March 5. (AP)—Frank Sinatra is back in a 4-F classification as a result of the unanimous vote of the four members of his Draft Board 19 at a regular meeting tonight.

Ira W. Caldwell, board chairman, said Saturday he had ordered the crooner placed in a 2-A-F classification after notification from Washington that military officials had disqualified Sinatra for the second time because of a punctured ear drum.

Following the board meeting tonight, Caldwell announced that the four members had voted unanimously to reclassify The Voice 4-F, rather than letting the 2-A-F classification assigned him Saturday by the board chairman stand.

Rationed Meals Need Substantial, Nutritious Dessert

By SALLY SAVER.

Meals in which the meat is short, usually need a substantial dessert. A dessert using a good quantity of milk is not heavy, though it packs a lot of good nutrition. Milk contains proteins of excellent quality, much the same as those in meat. Besides milk furnishes good tooth-building materials. Dark molasses is a good source of food iron, so these desserts are doubly valuable and should often be used in meat-short meals.

SOUTHERN RICE PUDDING

½ cup rice
1 quart milk
½ cup molasses
½ teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup raisins
3 tablespoons butter or margarine

Wash rice and drain. Combine with other ingredients, except butter and pour into a deep baking dish. Bake in a slow oven, 300 degrees for 2½ hours. Stir several times during the first hour of cooking and add butter at end of first hour.

APPLE-MOLASSES CRUMB

4 large cooking apples
½ cup water
¼ cup dark molasses
1-8 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ cup soft bread crumbs
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 tablespoon grated orange rind
3 tablespoons sugar

Peel apples and slice thin. Cook with ½ cup water over low heat until tender, but not soft. Pour into greased baking dish. Sprinkle lemon juice and molasses over. Mix bread crumbs, orange rind and butter and sprinkle over. Bake in 425-degree oven 30 minutes. Serve with hard sauce or cream.

The WORRY CLINIC

By DR. GEORGE W. CRANE

(Don't be ashamed because you are afraid, for every intelligent person often has fears. But conquer your fears instead of abjectly surrendering to them. Then you are brave. Notice how George and Philip refused to be stampeded by fear. They talked their way into courage.)

CASE F-208: When George and Philip were nine and eight years old, respectively, they decided to spend the night camping beside the creek that runs half a mile east of our farm home.

Two neighbor boys accompanied them. They employed Judy's Shetland pony as a pack horse and loaded their blankets, food and water upon her back. The pony's name is Queen. They had taken food for a couple of days.

After they arrived at their camping spot, they built a fire and started their evening meal. But Queen broke away and came home. This desertion on her part didn't improve their morale.

Besides, it set a precedent for the other two boys. Presently they decided their parents probably needed them so they ought to go home, too. Twilight was beginning to descend.

But George and Philip obstinately maintained that they were going to spend the night at their camp, regardless.

TALK YOURSELF INTO COURAGE

They spread their blankets on the ground and lay down. It began to grow darker. The moon came up, and weird moving shadows appeared as the trees swayed in the wind.

"What's that dark thing over there on the hill?" Philip asked his older brother.

"I don't know," George whispered. "It might be a robber or something."

That thought bothered both of them. Then George got an inspiration.

"You know, I was surprised that mama let us bring these .45s along with us," he spoke casually but loudly so the lurking bandit might hear.

"Yes, they're dangerous. They'd kill a person easy," Philip picked up his cue and loudly replied.

They waited a few moments, but nothing happened.

"Let's have some target practice and shoot at those dark spots there on the hill," Philip added.

"No, we better not do that. We might kill somebody," George nonchalantly replied. "You know, these .45 bullets carry a long way."

By this time, both boys decided they should come home for the night, so they rolled up their blankets and headed out of the pasture field to the road.

COURAGE CONQUERS FEAR

As they trudged westward toward our house, they approached an old, deserted dwelling. It was made of hewn logs but had later been weatherboarded. Nobody has lived in it for 25 years.

The boys like to call it a ghost house and concoct weird tales about it, ecpevially when their housins are visiting us.

But now they had to pass it in the moonlight. As they drew abreast of it, George spoke loudly to Philip:

"You go on ahead, Phil. I think I'll use my .45 and shoot through the windows of this old house just for the fun of it. I want to test out this new pistol."

So Philip moved possibly a step or two forward while George fired his cap pistol a few times, with a studious show of unconcern and bravado. Then they both hastened home. We greeted them about 9 p. m.

Considering the fact that Queen and the two neighbor boys had deserted them, and their impressionable age of eight and nine years, Mrs. Crane and I decided they had executed a very dignified and strategic withdrawal.

Bravery is simply the conscious refusal to be stampeded by fear. It means fear is present but we refuse to surrender to it. Our boys showed a variation of the old example of the youngsters whistling in the dark to bolster his own courage.

(Always write to Dr. Crane in care of The Constitution, inclosing a long 3c stamped, addressed envelope and a dime to cover typing or printing costs, when you send for one of his psychological charts.)

19 Truck Lines' Drivers, Helpers Go On Strike

The Trucking Commission of the War Labor Board will conduct a hearing here tomorrow on a controversy between 19 Atlanta intracity trucking lines and the Truck Drivers' and Helpers' Local, 728, AFL, following a strike which began yesterday morning.

Meantime first incident of violence reported to police as the result of the tieup sent a man listed as J. W. Bates, of a Willard avenue, S. W., address to Crawford W. Long hospital.

Bates, police reports said, was admitted for treatment of injuries received when a brick, hurled through the window of a truck he was driving, caused him to lose control of the machine and crash into a city garbage truck driven by Robert Burns, of a Hansell street address. The accident occurred near 342 Nelson street, northeast.

Emmett Smith, of 424 Fourth street, N. W., a passenger in Bates' truck, police said, accused James W. Clay, of a Whitehall street address, of hurling the brick. The incident was an outgrowth of the controversy, police added.

Clay was booked by Patrolmen F. A. Rhodes and W. G. Baldwin on a charge of assault and battery.

A specially called meeting of the local will be held at 11 a. m. today in the Union hall at 84½ Poplar street to discuss settlement of the controversy.

The strike grew out of negotiations on a new contract between the local chapter of the union and operators of the truck lines. Approximately 520 drivers of city pickup and delivery trucks, warehousemen, helpers and garage employes are involved.

Points of controversy in the new contract are weekly pay, annual holidays and a union request for two weeks' holiday for employes who have served more than two continuous years. The old contract expired March 1.

Guidance Center For State Vets Set Up at Tech

A vocational guidance center for returning veterans is now in operation at the Georgia School of Technology, one of 50 such college centers the veterans administration has established throughout the country.

A Georgia Tech official said last night many veterans over the state were using the facilities of the center, located on the first floor of the Swann Building on the campus.

Those in charge of the center give placement advice and training tests to veterans seeking to readjust themselves to civilian life. The center, it is said, is not only for Tech students but for all Georgia veterans.

At Washington, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, of the Veterans Administration said he plans to set up several hundred guidance center in schools and colleges.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By ALICE DENTON JENNINGS

March 21-April 19 (ARIES)—Public affairs or dealings with the public where finances are involved, contracts that are to be signed, or where it is necessary to use diplomacy, are especially favored today until 3:31 p. m. matters involving liquids are not so well favored at this time.

April 20-May 20 (TAURUS)—Before 9:58 a. m. is most unfavorable for beginning something that you want to mature rapidly. After 9:58 a. m. and throughout the remainder of the day and evening, you may give your aggressive inclinations full sway. This is a favorable period for speculative ideas, for mechanical and inventive affairs, artistic activities and dealing with the opposite sex.

May 21-June 20 (GEMINI)—The influences which culminate at 4:43 p. m. make the preceeding hours splendid for work along general business lines. This will be a good period for concerted efforts, especially if you are interested in machinery, industrial work and general office work.

June 21-July 22 (CANCER)—Several favorable influences culminating today makes this an auspicious time for dealings with those who are at the head of affairs, for financial deals, bankers, real estate, unusual and out of the ordinary affairs and people who are older and staid in their manner.

July 23-Aug. 22 (LEO)—This is one of those rare days that is filled with favorable vibrations for almost any endeavor. Until 4:09 p. m. will be favorable for changes, travel, mental improvement, pleasure and careful speculation.

Aug. 23-Sept. 22 (VIRGO)—Before 8:17 a. m. will be the better part of the day and try to get your important work done before that time. After 8:17 a. m. favors activities that require quickness, a quick mental attitude and dealings in machinery.

Sept. 23-Oct. 22 (LIBRA)—The entire day is not favorable for new and important undertakings, for the influences tend to retard or delay matters or bring disappointments with an inability to gain the expected results that you at first hoped for.

Oct. 23-Nov. 21 (SCORPIO)—The combined influences operating throughout the entire day make this a very negative day. The affairs you are attempting will seem to get nowhere, or will not go at all. Changes, especially important changes are not favored and more care than usual should be given to diet.

Nov. 22-Dec. 21 (SAGITTARIUS)—Previous to 1:14 p. m. think before you act and be cautious around firearms, structural work or metals. After 1:14 p. m. and continuing throughout the day, the better side of your nature will be stirred and you can deal advantageously in work that is quick, active and business-like.

Dec. 22-Jan. 18 (CAPRICORN)—Previous to 7:06 p. m. favors going forward with determination, branching out in new work, dealings with friends and associations. After 7:06 p. m. is a time to stick to routine matters. For the most part people will want to start off in new ways that are not sound.

Jan. 19-Feb. 18 (AQUARIUS)—If you want the approval or co-operation in work that demands inspiration, seek to interest others in your ideas before 12:36 noon. Between 12:36 noon and 11:31 p. m. is slightly favorable for dealing with people of influence, for communications, plans and decisions.

Feb. 19-March 20 (PISCES)—There is apt to be too much strain, too much rashness, to come to agreements before 12:43 p. m. This is a day to be careful of your tongue and your temper, or it may be that someone will use these qualities against you.

SALLY FORTH Says:

Tax on Bachelors Meets With Stern Disapproval

Reps. Alexander, Connerat, Holleman, Mankin, Smith and Looper are certainly in BAD with Atlanta bachelors! On account, of course, of the bill they introduced in the Georgia house last week proposing a tax of $100 a year on all bachelors, plus $10 for each year that the bachelor is over 30, the proceeds to go to the spinsters of the state.

The bill, however, does provide one loophole. Bachelors who want to evade the tax may do so by submitting affidavits from at least three spinsters that they have proposed marriage during the preceding three years and have been rejected.

Immediately upon the release of the announcement, rumblings began in various quarters of the city. Here are some of the comments which Sally is privileged to quote from a group of prominent bachelors:

George Northern, well-known lawyer: "As a special privilege tax for single blessedness, it looks like $100 isn't too high, but it seems to me the rate should decrease with the years, since the special privileges and pleasures decrease. But, on the contrary, if a bachelor leads a 'dog's' life, as some people seem to think, then $1.50 a year would be about right."

Thornton Kennedy, recently of the armed forces: "I certainly don't approve that bill! It is definitely silly, but even if it should be passed, that wouldn't lure me out of my bachelorhood."

Bamore Gambrell, attorney at law: "My only comment is that I'm glad that the members of our legislature find some way to amuse themselves."

Charles Gardner, insurance executive: "But why not amend the bill and give spinsters the right to propose? Then, some of us shy bachelors would not have to remain single."

Daniel Whitehead Hicky, nationally known poet and columnist: "Stupidity reaches a new height! I can't imagine any sane person thinking up such a bill. Why, bachelors' expenses are far greater than those of married men. For instance, when a bachelor takes a young lady out for an evening, he goes to the expense of renting a car, if he doesn't own one; sending her flowers, wining and dining her. And when bachelors visit friends, they must send the hostess a lovely gift and reciprocate in other ways. Many bachelors aid their relatives financially, too, and they are called on to be godfathers, ushers and groomsmen in weddings—that's all expensive. Well, I just think it is too stupid for words."

Jimmy Setze, businessman: "To think of our legislators wasting their time on any such trifles as this bill! There's one thing certain, I'm not going to propose to any old maid three years in succession. Another thing, I think if the bill is introduced, the money, instead of being distributed on Valentine's Day, as was proposed in the press release, should be dealt out on April Fool's Day. Helen Mankin is crazy for putting her name to such a bill."

WINTER VACATION IN CANADA

Gertrude and Bill (Dr. W. O.) Martin have just returned from a most enjoyable trip to Quebec, Canada, where they and their children, Trudy, Jane and Billy, spent ten days at that romantic old hotel, the Chateau Frontenac, overlooking the St. Lawrence river.

The Martins chose this particular time of the year for their trip because the children had wanted, more than anything else, to engage in a little skiing and now, of course, that section of Canada is snowbound and icy.

It was a great trip for each of the Martins but especially for Trudy. Sally hears that after taking three ski lessons she could perform almost like a professional. And she loved it!

But that wasn't the biggest thrill Trudy got in Canada. It so happened that her fourteenth birthday anniversary occurred during their stay at the Frontenac. Bill Sr. arranged with the matre d'hotel to have a birthday cake made and gave him a list of Trudy's favorite foods. Not a word about her birthday was mentioned all day long, but that evening when she entered the dining room the orchestra, dressed in colonial costumes, struck up the strains of "Happy Birthday to You." Still Trudy didn't take it in that they were playing for her!

Finally, when the family was seated, the waiter brought in a beautiful birthday cake and it was not until that moment that she realized that her family hadn't forgotten her. And when her parents presented her a handsome gold fountain pen, she really felt like a princess.

DR. KELLY'S PORTRAIT

Among the guests were Glascock and his wife, the former Marguerite Scott, of Atlanta, who are now residing in Florence, S. C., while the former is completing a painting assignment.

"FASHION FIFTH" FLOOR

ALL IN THE GAME
JACK TROY

Sears Was Right Those few days of sun last week aren't the reason why a few of our citizens are walking around with red complexions. The reason is that they trusted to memory and challenged Ziggy Sears' statement that he made his famous catch in the SECOND inning of the Atlanta-Fort Worth Dixie series championship game in 1935.

Sears made the catch. He should know what inning it was. After all, the catch won a championship; it robbed Hollis McLaughlin of a game he might have won. McLaughlin hit the ball. And then he went on to lose a 1-0 game. Sears went on to become a National League umpire—the robber!

Atlantans who lose to Sears in the memory test, just as the Crackers lost on his catch, shouldn't feel too badly. It has happened before. Jack Broyles, one of the fans who saw the catch, has saved a clipping of another occasion when some experts had suggested the catch came late in the game.

Broyles' clipping contains an admission of defeat by the other experts, who had gone back to the files and reviewed the game.

The Crackers had two men on base, there were two out and McLaughlin hit a mighty liner to left. Sears made a phenomenal jumping catch. All that's correct. But the inning was the second, as Sears, himself, wrote the other day.

For some odd reason, nine out of every 10 fans recalling the catch today insist it came in the late innings.

We're indebted to Jack Broyles for sending in the old clipping that settles the argument for once and for all.

And it just goes to show how memory will trick the best of men.

Hornsby's Element Baseball has more or less given Rogers Hornsby a cold shoulder since the playing days of the great right-handed batter. And yet Hornsby, more than any other individual, has been responsible for the development of many fine young players in baseball schools for more than a dozen years.

Hornsby finally worked back into baseball as part-owner and manager of the Fort Worth club of the Texas League. But the war came along and the Texas League was among the first minor circuits to disband.

Hornsby tried his hand at managing a team in the Mexican League. But Rajah didn't speak Spanish and the job blew up on him. Too much sass from the owners.

Now the Rajah is being employed again to do one of the things that he really does best—teaching kids how to play the game.

Under the sponsorship of the Chicago Daily News, Hornsby shortly will launch a city-wide system of baseball instruction which will reach more than 100,000 kids between the ages of 10 and 16. In co-operation with the Chicago park system, the Junior American Legion, Cubs-White Sox and Old-Timers Association, Hornsby and the Daily News will lend a helping hand in every playground of the Chicago area.

The Rajah will give personal instruction in hitting and fielding. The complete program, including assemblies for baseball coaches, will run from three to five months.

Those on the outside of baseball may wonder why so talented a man never worked high into the organization of major league baseball.

Well, the Rajah apparently had a little weakness for playing the ponies. This practice has been frowned on the higher ups and has been a millstone around the neck of his career.

But he's an idol of the kids. Baseball needs a lot more men like him. There are worse things than playing the ponies.

Jughaid Society This is the season of the year when that famous society of newspaper sports writers—the In-the-Middle Society—holds its annual indignation meeting and resolves never again.

The coaches employ a neat brand of psychology during the season. Never willing to accept a role of favorite, they can give a thousand reasons why they can't win.

The players see this in the papers and get plenty sore at the writers.

"What does that so-and-so mean by writing we can't win. of all the crust—!"

The coach accepts this attitude gleefully and, if questioned as to his methods, simply says "boys will be boys. Don't take them seriously.

But, boy, oh boy, it's different when the shoe is on the other foot.

A writer hears an enthusiastic young player declare that his team shouldn't lose a game—or "wish we had a chance at Chittling High. They'd be a cinch for us."

So the writer goes ahead and quotes the young man.

Then it's the coach's turn to blow his top.

"What in the world did you men by that story today?" he demands, as the telephone operators on the switchboard blush. Because he really didn't say "what in the world."

The story pleases the players but it incites the coach to near-riot.

So the writer can't be right. He can only write and hope for the best. He's a lifetime member of the Jughaid Society.

And if he suggests there's an edge for one team or another in the annual rivalry, he's really in a heck of a fix, win, lose or draw.

The happier chroniclers of sports events are those who pursue the middle course. They're the ones who don't believe in changing horses in mid-stream unless, of course, the horse is on top of them.

Novikoff and Strand It was back in the spring of 1927, or thereabouts, that the Crackers numbered among the squad members a player named Paul Strand.

Connie Mack had spent $70,000 for Strand, a sensational outfielder of Salt Lake City. Strand, missing the thin air of the Salt Lake region, found he couldn't hit the ball for great distances in the majors. (He might possibly have missed Coast League pitching, too.)

Connie Mack shrewdly peddled him off to Atlanta for a considerable sum. Bert Niehoff was managing the Crackers then. Always the first to admit a mistake, Niehoff gave up on Strand at the end of spring training. Strand's failure in the majors apparently had ruined him for all classes of baseball.

Lou Novikoff, also from the Coast League, has returned to the Double-A circuit branded as the biggest flop since Strand. Novikoff played under normal conditions at Los Angeles and was figured a bargain at $75,000. But the minor-major transition proved too much for the "Mad Russian." And his behavior off the diamond apparently discouraged the other National League clubs when he could have been had for the waiver price of $7,500.

Boys' High Rifle Team Wins Fourth

Boys' High's rifle team won its fourth straight match of the season Saturday, outpointing North Fulton, 1,975 to 1,846, in a 12-man squad match, this being twice the usual size of squads.

W. Major, of Boys' High, led his team with 183 and Smith was high for North Fulton with 172. The teams' total scores were made out of a possible 2,400. Previous victories were scored by Boys' High over Decatur (twice) and West Fulton.

The Boys' High team is coached by S. Sgt. James E. Porterfield and North Fulton by S. Sgt. Henry J. Karwisch. The Purples expect to enter the GIAA meet at G. M. A. this spring.

Racing Ban To Be Eased On V-E Day

Resumption of Horse Racing on Limited Scale Probable

NEW YORK, March 5.—(UP)—The office of War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes has agreed upon a plan for resumption of limited horse racing "as soon as war conditions in Europe are sufficiently improved to warrant it," Maj. Thomas H. McCreery, head of the Horsemen's Protective Benevolent Association said today.

McCreery said he had discussed all of the aspects of the racing situation with Maj. Gen. Lucius D. Clay, a Byrnes' deputy in a lengthy conference last week.

"Gen. Clay assured us that when Justice Byrnes considers that war conditions permit, he will call in representatives of the horsemen, the owners, the breeders and the racing association for consultation on a plan for racing," McCreery said.

Byrnes, he said, was well pleased with the co-operation of racing to the nationwide close-down of tracks, which he said was done with "a minimum of complaint."

Others signed were Jack (Red) Hollis, of Columbia, S. C.; Jimmy Eskridge, of Charlotte, infielders, and Pitcher Mason Leeper, of Gastonia.

College Park Tourney Will Begin Tonight

The last of Greater Atlanta's big 1945 basketball tournaments will get under way tonight on the College Park court, where four games will usher in the College Park Open meet which embraces 13 outstanding girls' sextets and 11 men's quintets.

The tournament is the only double elimination affair being held in the vicinity this year. A team must lose twice before being eliminated from the tourney.

The Lawson General Hospital five, which lost to the Ft. Benning Paratroopers in a rugged battle for the Georgia State championship at Sports Arena Sunday, will be one of the strong contenders for the crown in the men's division, which last year was won by the Lawson Medical Technicians. The Ft. Benning all-stars also are expected to put in a strong bid for the title.

The girls' tournament will be divided into A and B divisions. Hollie Lough's often-a-brides-maid-but-never-a-bride Lorelei Ladies sextet, which Sunday lost the state crown to the Sports Arena team by a single point, heads the list of feminine entrants. They will open the tourney against the Ft. Benning WACS at 7 p. m. today.

The Conley A. O. D. lassies will clash with the E. Z. Mills femmes, of Cartersville, at 8 p. m., after which two games in the men's open will be played.

The Army Weather five, from Marietta, will engage the Hapeville club at 9 p. m., and the Ft. Mac quint will match goals with the strong Dental College five-some in the 10 p. m. game which will ring down the curtain on first night engagements.

WEDNESDAY'S SCHEDULE
7 p. m.—Army Aces vs. Division Engineers (girls).
8 p. m.—College Park vs. Bell Assemblers (boys).
9 p. m.—Marietta vs. Lawson (girls).
10 p. m.—Candler W. O. W. vs. Red Shield Pilots (girls).

Boomer, Babe Will Team Up

Fans can look forward to plenty of action on this week's wrestling card booked for Friday night at the City auditorium.

Promoter Paul Jones has scheduled a team tag match as the headliner and when the boys get together in this type of match there is, usually, very few dull moments. Boom Boom Daffy Don Lee and Bouncing Babe Zaharias, two of the most colorful and by far two of the most unpopular grapplers to appear here, will clash with Al Massey and Ben Bennicasa in this tag tussle, which will be contested on a best two-out-of-three-fall basis.

The Boomer is a one-man riot himself and with the Babe in there on his side, the crowd can expect most anything to happen. Al and Ben are both favorites with local fans, and no doubt will have the support of practically all the crowd Friday.

Two good supporting matches will also be contested on this program. In the opener, Cowboy Luttrell, the Fort Worth, Texas, roughie, will clash with hefty Charlie Harbin. This bout will be limited to 20 minutes. Gentleman John Mauldin and Son Almand will battle it out in the semi-wind-up, a one-fall to a finish affair.

Tickets are now on sale at Piedmont Hatters.

Rucker Signs Pact

NEW YORK, March 5.—(AP)—The Giants announced today the signing of four outfielders, Joe Medwick, Johnny Rucker, Steve Filipowicz and Danny Gardella. The Giants now have a total of nine men signed for the coming baseball season.

R. L. (BUCK) DOYAL ENTERS AT TECH

R. L. (Buck) Doyal Jr., son of Shorty Doyal, and one of the best all-round athletes in Boys' High's history, has entered Georgia Tech.

The only four-letter athlete in the memory of his dad, 20-years head coach of the Purple Hurricane, recently was named to the Zodiac, highest honor society on the campus at Boys' High. He was named the outstanding player on the 1944 Southern championship eleven and awarded the John Brown trophy in recognition of the honor.

Buck was All-City football center for two years, all-GIAA center in 1944 and named co-captain of The Constitution's 1944 All-city eleven. He also was chosen on the 1945 All-GIAA basketball team after the tournament in Columbus recently.

Doyal was a member of the National Athletic Scholarship Society and the Hi-Y club at Boys' High.

JONES SHOOTS 65 AT CAPITAL CITY

In a blistering practice round Sunday on the Capital City Golf Club course, Bob Jones toured the 18 holes in 65, it was reported yesterday.

Afterwards Jones told Pop Beckett, the club pro, that the course is in wonderful shape.

Jones played in a foursome that included John O. Chiles, Capital City president; Dick Garlington and John Grant.

Haegg Will Race Again This Weekend

NEW YORK, March 5.—(AP)—Gunder Haegg, Swedish ace who finished last in a five-man race last Saturday, said today he would run the mile again this weekend and that he hoped he could cut at least 10 seconds off his 4:31 board floor debut.

"I could have lowered my time by about eight seconds last Saturday night but I saw that I was beaten and there was no need to risk a possible injury. I'll make no prediction on how I will come out the next time," he said through an interpretor at a luncheon.

SPORTS

NATIONAL RECOGNITION

Purple Eleven Rated Among Nation's Best

By CHARLIE ROBERTS.

Boys' High school, and Coach R. L. (Shorty) Doyal, who has guided the football destinies of the institution for 20 years, have been paid one of the highest tributes possible. The Purple Hurricane has been named among the five outstanding high school football teams in the nation over a period of years by the Mid-Western Sports Association.

The association, which has headquarters in Canton, Ohio, recently wrote the Basso Profundo of Parkway Drive asking him for pertinent information regarding his elevens' record through the years "in order to complete an article on your team which we intend to feature."

Shorty naturally was bursting with pride over the well-deserved tribute since the record of the Boys' High teams was considered along with that of the outfits of 28,000 other prep aggregrations in the nation. No inkling was given as to where in the first five the Purples rated.

Doyal was asked to give information on his system of play, average age, weight, caliber of opponents year in and year out, etc. Among the more laughable questions asked, in view of the fact Atlanta has no high school stadium, was "What is the size of your stadium?" and "What is the name of your field?"

"We are very proud of our record naturally," Doyal pointed out, "and we are equally proud of the fact so many of our players are really fine students as well. Eighteen boys on our varsity squad last year were members of the National Athletic Scholarship Society to which we admit only members making letters in major sports. Six of our 10 varsity basketball players this year also were members.

"Another record of which we are mighty proud is the one Boys' High has compiled in basketball for the last five years," Doyal continued enthusiastically. "During that period we have been eliminated by the ultimate GIAA champion in the state tournament either in the finals or semi-finals. This year it was Lanier. In the four previous years it was Columbus, Jordan, Lanier and Savannah. The Geechies dumped us by a single point on Herb Bermann's field goal in the last 30 seconds in 1941. He later starred at Georgia Tech. We haven't lost a game to a team in the city in the last two years and have won the Atlanta city title five straight years."

The football players who belong to the NASS, 13 of which never have failed a subject, are Buck Doyal, Fred Allman, Billy Winter, Ewell Pope, Jimmy Skelton, Sid Tiller, George Brodnax, Traylor Thiesen, Newton Turk, Jimmy Ridley, Don Hubbard, Ed Swanson, Doug Smith, Joe Kelly, Gordon Johnston, Ricardo Sewell and Bob Schallant.

Shorty is now busying himself with spring football practice, and announced last night that around 140 boys are out for the team. A game with G. M. A. will be played Saturday night, March 17, at G. M. A., and another with Marist about a week later.

'Cats Accepts NCAA Bid

LEXINGTON, Ky., March 5.—(AP)—Kentucky's Southeastern conference basketball champions today accepted an invitation to play in the National Collegiate Basketball Tournament which opens in New York March 22.

Kentucky will be entered in the eastern division of the tournament, which will be played March 22 and 24. The winner will play the western division champion in New York March 27. The tournament champion then will meet the winner of the Metropolitan Invitational Tourney in a mythical national championship playoff for benefit of the Red Cross.

Tennessee, beaten by Kentucky in the Southeastern conferen e tournament at Louisville Saturday night, has accepted a bid to play in the Metropolitan. Kentucky, an entry in the Metropolitan last season, lost in the second round but won consolation honors.

TOP HITTER TO GET $5,000 WAR BOND

WICHITA, Kan., March 5.—(AP)—The National Baseball Congress has offered a $5,000 war bond to the leading non-professional hitter of the annual national baseball tournament.

A player, to be eligible, must participate in at least five national tournament games, be an amateur and be associated with a club belonging to the congress' National Association of Leagues.

Winner of the bond, said President Ray Dumont, will be chosen on the basis of batting averages in the 1945 tourney scheduled in Wichita Aug. 10 to 22.
